PREFACE.

ACCUSTOMED in the present day to the highest degree of eivil and religious liberty that man perhaps can ever expect to enjoy, free to express our opinions without the terrors of the stake or the tortures of the rack, to awe us into silenee, or force us into dissimulation. it is with a mixture of curiosity and indignant surprise that we cast back our glance over a space of centuries, and see our ancestors struggling in all the mazes of ignorance and the labyrinths of superstition, alike passive under the mental tyranny of their monkish rulers and the bodily servitude of their despotie lords.

But every thing in this world changes, and excessive tyranny only more effectually prepares the way for perfect freedom. The minds of men in some degree induced to reason by the measures of Heury the Eighth, were no longer to be blinded by false pretences or intimidated by impotent threats; and the commencement of the Reformation dawned steadily and beautifully through the mists of papistic eraft that the mental sloth of ages had permitted to aecumulate.

It is diffieult for us to imagine the despotic control at that time exercised over the whole faculties, whether physical or mental, of our ancestors; and it requires some effort to picture to ourselves the revivifying effect that must have attended the spreading of the reformerd doctrines. Men, who had seldom exerted their reasoning powers, were at onee invited to discuss theological difficulties, and to solve the deepest mysteries of religion: and as by the reformed tenets every matter was open for discussion, there were fow bounds set to inquiry; but various tenets and various opinions were as quickly spread, as eagerly adopted.

At this critical moment a translation of that Book, by all allowed to be the only proper guide of conduct, the only safe chart by whose aid man could hope to steer through the stormy seas and dangerous shoals with which his course is surrounded, was pubhished and set forth:
and its effect in hushing controversy and silencing factious clamour, may not unaptly be compared to that of the sun, when he breaks through the fast flitting clouds, and shining forth, dispels them by his brightness; and day, beantiful day, reigns in all its splendour.

The light that thus broke through the mental darkness of the reign of Henry the Eighth, fied as it was by the Holy Word of God, burnt purely and steadily; and although adverse winds and hostile gusts shook its lame for a time during the reign of Mary, they could not extinguish it, but left it to throw its calm and heavenly rays on our own and future ages.

That tanslation of the Bible is now for the second time reprinted, ${ }^{*}$ and words of ours are not necessary either to point ont its worth or to extol its merit, to cite it for its interest or celebrate it for its rarity-but it goes forth once again into the world as the labour of a man eminent for his piety and learning, as a faithful version of the original Scriptures, and as me of those means to which we may gratefully ascribe the establishment of our present national religion.

M Y L E S C O V ERD A LE.

The name of our venerable translator seems to have been derived, not from his parents, but from his birthplace. Yorkshire, according to the best authorities, was his native county; and there e:m be no reasonable doubt that he was born in the parish of Coverham, in the district of 'Coverdale, in the North Riding. The year 1488 is given as the date of his birth, but the month and day cannot be ascertained. An obscurity, which no researeh has been sufficient to diepel, rests on his parentage and carly education: we may presume that he spent his boyish days among the tranquil scenes of his native place, familiar with its sloping hills, verdant meadows, and cheerful trout streans, which, as they spread before the eyes of this active minded lad, would aronse many a bautiful thonght, and inspire many a happy feeling. Coverham Abbey was situated in the neighbourhoot of his hirthplace, and perhaps it was by some of the brotherhood of that establishment that young Miles of Coverdale was instructed in the elements of leaming. *

At what period he left Yorkshire we are not informed, but in early life he entered the Momastery of the Augustines at Cambridge, of which he afterwards became a brother. Previnus to the visit of Erasmus in the year 1511, learning appears to have been at a low cblb at Cambridge; afterwards it revived, having received an impulse from the influcnce of that extratordinry man: great hostility, however, was manifested by many in the miversity towards his eflonts for the revival of literature, for when the Greek Testament, which he had edited, first appeared in C'ambridge, it was absolutely forbidden by the heads of one of the eolleges. "They object to us," suit Eramme, "the feigned authority of syoods, and magnify the great peril of the Christian daith, and the danger of the church, which they pretend to supmort with their shoulders, which are mond fitter tur prop at waggon." Among the scholars who mainly contabuted to the restoration of sumel learning in the university, Dr. Robert Barnes, who entered the Augustine Monastery in 1:itt, and hecame prior and master in 1523 , stands preeminent. He cultivated a taste for clasie literature, devoted himedi to the study of the Seriptures, and after his conversim, became a loading champon of the lieformation. Coverdale, being one of the order of the Augustine friars, was asociated with this distinguished individual, and probably derived great advantage fiom his friendship and instructions.

The priory of the Augustines rapidly advanced in literary reputation under the presdeney of Parnes. Foxe says" he cansed the huse shortly to flomish with grout hetters, and male a erveat part of the honse learned (who before were drowned in bubbous rudeness), as Master (ambridere, Master Fieh, Master Coleman, Master Burley, Master Coyerdate, with divers others of the miversity that sojoumed there for leaming's sake." $\dagger$ Divine lrovidence was thus perparing wur tramitater, hy

The principles of evangelical truth which were embraced by Barnes gradually spread, and many in the university began to rally round him and adopt his views. Drawn together by devout sympathies, they were accustomed to assemble for study, conference, and prayer; and that they might do this as much as possible unnoticed by their enemies, they chose as their place of resort, a house called " the White Horse," which had a private back entrance, convenient for the men of St. John's and King's College, who appear to have formed a considerable part of the assembly. One's imagination lingers over that old "White llorse," with its antiquated apartments, as a kind of infant school, where those babes in Christ were trained up under the care of the Great Teacher, for subsequent uscfulness and honour. These meetings, however private, could not fail to attract atteution; the house was contemptuously called "Germany," on account of its being thus associated with the principles of Luther; and circumstances at length required that the friends of truth should publicly declare themselves. ILence, on Christmas eve, Sunday 24th December, 1525,* Barnes preached at S't. Edmund's Chureh, Trinity LLall, and boldly avowed his dissent from the superstitions and despotism of Rome. LIe took oceasion in his discourse to make an attack on Cardinal Wolsey, and, if we are to believe what was said by his accusers, to ridicule his golden shoes, his pole-axes, pillars, golden cushions, crosses and red gloves. A vein of humour, and a habit of satirical ant witty allusion to the manners of the times, and the abuses in the church, were in those days regarded as by no means unseemly in the pulpit, and were frequently indulged in with great effect by the advocates of the licformation. The playful sallics, and the hard arguments of Barnes were offensive to the friends of l'opery and to the proud cardinal, and very shortly after the delivery of this famous sermon we find the preacher in trouble. He was apprehended, conveyed to London, and brought before Wolsey: convicted of heresy, the alternative was offered-to abjure or burnpoor human nature shrunk from the tiery ordeal, and in an evil moment Barnes signed his recantation.
"Master Coverdale" is mentioned by Foxe as one of the friends who accompanied the prior of the Augustines to London, stood by him in his trials, and assisted in the preparation for his defence the night before he met the cardimal. Such conduct indicates his faithful attachment to Barnes, and shows that he felt a strong sympathy with him in his religions views: but neither his master nor himself, at that time, saw the whole of the truth upon the grand points of the popish controversy. Coverdale was only feeling his way by degrees out of those paths of theological error in which he had been accustomed to walk. So firr as he perceived the light, he was prepared to follow it.

Another name of a far different character here becomes connected with Coverdale's history. He was introlucel to Cromwell, and the friendship of that extraordinary person led to very important consequenees. The patronage of one who was then a favourite with Wolsey, and afterwards so distinguished a favourite with Ilenry VIII, must have greatly contributed to Coverdale's personal safety amilst the dangers that threatened the advocates of the Relormation; and, moreover, the peemiary assistance, which there is no doubt that he received from the same quarter in his literary studies, and in his work of translation, were of ereat value; but though we are disposed to give Coverilile eredit for honesty and courage, we admit that it is possible he was for awhile somewhat fettered by his comection with this remarkable man. There is a letter from Coverdale to Cromwell, preserved among the State Papers, without date, which evidently belongs to the commencement of their acruaintance; perhaps it was written in the year 1527 , or somewhat earlier. $\dagger$

"With due humility, I bescech unto your Mastership all godly comfort, grace, and prosperous health. For so much as your goodness is so great toward me, your poor child, only through the plenteousness of your favour and benevolence, I am the bolder of your goodness, in this my rude style. if it like your favour, to revocate to your memory the godly communication which your Mastership had with me, your orator, in Master Moor's house upon Easter Eve, amongst many and divers fruitful exhortations, specially of your singular favour, and by your most comfortable words, I perceive your gracious mind towards me.
" Wherefore, most honourable Master, for the tender love of God, and for the fervent zeal that you have to virtuc and godly study, (cordis genibus provolutus,) I humbly desire and bescech your goodness, of your gracious help. Now I begin to taste of Holy Seriptures; now, honour be to God I am sct to the most sweet smell of holy letters, with the godly savour of holy and ancient doctors, unto whose knowledge I cannot attain, without diversity of books, as is not unknown to your most excellent wisdom. Nothing in the world I desire, but books as concerning my learning. They once had, I do not doubt but Almighty God shall perform that in me, which He, of his most plentiful favour and grace, hath begun. Moreover, as touching my behaviour, your Mastership's mind once known, with all lowliness I offer myself, not only to be ordered in all things as shall please your wisdom, but also as concerning the education and instruction of others, alonly to ensue your prudent counsel ; for whatever there is in you of counsel, nothing is impolitic, nothing but what is divine; for whatever you do, you do nothing inconsiderately, and you never boast that you are a chicf philosopher: of the dew of heaven (after the manner of Jacob) you have obtained the chief blessing. From your mighty stream I long to drink, because, in your presence, I would not speak in a common manner. Farewell, thou ornament of literature, of councils, and of all virtues!
"From the Augustine"s this May-day. Your child and beedman in Jesu Christ,
"Frere Myles Cof dale." *

From this letter it appears, that Coverdale had recently been introduced to the rising favourite, and had received from him tokens of kindness which inspired his gratitude and eonfidence. Cromwell was favourable to the Reformation, and had devoted himself in carly life to the reading of the New Testament. Coverdale wanted books to assist him in the study of the Scriptures, and the drift of the letter scems to be a delicate application for Cromwell's aid in that respect. The tone of submission and flattery adopted by Coverdale, was one of the vices of the age, in which he was too prone to indulge; and when comparing him with his great contemporary Tyndale, in this point of view, it is remarkable how superior the latter appears. The house in which the interview took place is supposed by Mr. Anderson $\dagger$ to have been Sir T. More's, and this connection between Coverdale and Sir Thomas, suggests another reason for the security which our translator enjoyed in those perilous times. He was still at Cambridge in the Augustine Priory, on the 25th of August of the same year, when he wrote the following letter to his patron:-

"In my most lowly manner, I commend me unto you, evermore desiring to hear of the preservation of your prosperity. So it is, I was required by Mr. George Lawson to deliver this writing to your Mastership mine ownself; notwithstanding, such an impediment hath chanced, that I must desire favour on your behalf for my excusation. For Master Moors kinsman is not all well at ease, for he labours. it is certainly thought under fever, the fever being of that species that in regard to food, he foolishly turns away from it like a lunatic, but now it is discovered that he is almost rid of it. Wherefore, I beseech you to have me excused, and if I knew that my coming to London might stand with your favour, truly the bird was never gladder of day than I would be to come. But briefly, I am ready at your commandment, for it remains with you to command as you will the abilities of your Miles.
"As for the rest, there is nothing divulged with us that is new, except the rumour among our order that one of our masters is accused of homicide, another is dilated for heresy, and a third is reported of the [^3]crime of theft, namely Master Stocks, junior; of which affair I will certify you afterwards, on its being made manifest. I have nothing more to say, every blessing attend you and yours. This may Christ the mighty grant, to whom be honour and dominion for ever.

"From Cambridge 27th August, 1527.

" Yours Milo Coverdalus."*

This letter would seem to show that Coverdale was at that time in Cromwell's employ, and it expresses a readiness to obey his commands, which would have been more to the writer's credit had it been somewhat qualified. But in Coverdale's mind the truth through " the sweet smell of holy letters" was progressing: the superstitions and errors of popery were seen with increased vividness, and the mental excreises and conflicts of our translator led, eventually, to the renunciation of the friar's cowl, and the bold and warm-hearted preaching of the reformed faith. In the bloodstained register of the Bishop of London, we find the following confession by Thomas Topley, an Augustine Friar, which throws light on the course adopted by Coverdale at this crisis in his history. " My mind," says the confessor," was much troubled with the said book • Wicliff"s Wicket,' which did make the sacrament of Christ's body, in form of bread, but a remembrance of Christ's passion, till I heard Sir Myles Coverdale preach, and then my mind was sore withdrawn from the blessed sacrament, insomuch that I took it then for the remembrance of Christ's body. Furthermore he said and confessed, that in the Lent last past, as he was walking in the field at Bumstend, with Sir Myles Coverdate, late friar of the same order, going in the habit of a secular priest, who had preached the fourth. Sunday in Lent at Bumstead (29th Mareh, 1528), they did commune together of Erasmus' works, and also upon confession. This Sir Miles said, and did hold that it was sullicient for a man to be contrite for his sins betwixt God and his conscience, without confession made to a priest, which opinion this respondent thought to be true, and did aftirm and hold the same at that time. Also he saith, that at the said sermon made by the said Sir Myles Coverdale at Bumsteal, he heard him preach against worshipping of images in the church, saying, that men in no wise should honour or worship them, which likewve he thought to be true, because he had no learming to defend it." $\dagger$ Coverdale hat now taken a decided step:-faithful to his convictions, he confessed his Saviour before men. Perhaps it was with a lively remembrance of the treatment he had received in the early part of his history as an avowed reformer, that he wrote the following passage in his preface to a work entitled, 'The Old Faith.' "Alas! and woe to this unthankful wontd, for like as a great number that be in prison of Satan, will not come forth when they are called, and the door set open, but go on still stumbling in darkness when the lantern of light is offered them ; even so if any man play a wise man's part, and do as he is warned by God's word, he shall have a sort of apish people, a number of dizzards, and scornful mockers; which because the man will not dance in the devil's moriece with them, nor keep their company in the bondage of sin and vice; neither run with them into like confusion, as St. Peter calleth it, laugh him to scorn, and blear out their tongues at him, even like fools and coxcombs of the world. And like as when a purir wretch cometh ont of prison, he shall have more to stand gazing and gaping npon him, than to do him good, or to help him to his fees: even so now that God of his merey hath ealled us out of Satan's prison, and from the school of false doctrine, my lord's fool, with his companions. standeth staring upon us, and mocketh us because we sit not still with other prisoners. There goeth a fellow of the new learning, saith one; there is one of these new-fangled guspellers, saith another; that is whe of the new brethren, saith a thirch, he followeth the new faith." $\ddagger$

The buld step taken by Coverdale, and the confession made by Topley, belong to the year 1528; and the next year we find the former on the continent in company with the illustrious Tyndale; accorling tw Fuxe's statement, mecting there by apointment, and assisting him in preparing the translation of the ''entatench forthe press; for which his recent studies in Holy Scripture, and his well known acpuaintance with the original kmguages, which must surely have been commenced before this period, had in a good degree qualilied him. The immediate cause of his leaving

[^4]England, does not appear; but coupling the fact of his departure early in 1529, with the decided course he was pursuing in 1528 , the common supposition that it was with a view to his personal safety, seems by no means improbable.*

In the year 1526 , copies of Tyndale's version were stealthily brought over from the continent. and were scattered throughout England. The priest, the layman, the scholar, and the peasant, sought and obtained the blessed book, and many and touching are the tales related respecting its circulation and its use. Sometimes it was read in the secret chamber by the midnight lamp, or in the fields and forests far away from the haunts of men; and sometimes it was concealed from the prying search of enemies in warehouses, under heaps of flax; in cottages under the boarding of the floor; and in many other ways which pions ingennity devised. The portion of God's word which the people now possessed, quickened their desire for the rest of the sacred volume; and the intluence of Anne Boleyn, who for a time reigned supreme in the king's affection, disposed Henry to relax somewhat his severe opposition to the circulation of the Scriptures in English. Cranmer, who was raised to the primacy in 1533, publicly expresed his earnest desire to see the Bible in the hands of his fellow comtrymen, and in the winter of 1534 , four days before Christmas, stood up in the Chapter Honse of Old St. Paul's, amidst a convocation of the clergy, and moved that the king should be petitioned to grant a translation of the entire scriptures into the English language. $\dagger$ The year 1535 may therefore be regarded as a critical era in the religions history of our country; when the people were waiting for the word of life, and some of the obstacles in the path of its progress were melting away.

Coverdale was the first to meet the existing spiritual want of lis country. Where he went after he left Tyndale camot now be shown; there is a chasm in his history from that time to the year 1535: but his publication then of the whole Bible, shows that during the interval, I'rovidence had been preparing him for the performance of a great work. Judging from the result of his toil given to the world, we may fairly infer that he had been spenclingsome years in study; which, whether it had direct reference or not to such an undertaking, certamly fitted him for it, and provided him with materals for its execution. The history of the origin and progress of his translation is involved in great obscurity. Three or four points only can be satisfactorily ascertained, the rest are left to probable conjecture. He states himself, in his prologue to the ctition of the Bible published in 1550, that he undertook, as he was desired in the year 1534 , to set forth this special translation. And he also states in his prologue to the translation the following particulars:-" Considering how excellent knowledge and learning an interpreter of scripture ought to have in the tongues. and pondering also mine own insufliciency therein, and how weak I am to perform the office of a translator, I was the more loath to meddle with this work. Notwithstanding, when I considered how great pity it was that we should want it so long, and called to my remembrance that adversity of them, which were not only of nipe knowled!re, but would whso with all their heurts have performed that they befan, if they had not had impetiment; romsidering, I say, that by reason of their adversity it could not so soon have been brought to an sud as om most prosperous nation would fain have had it; these, and other reasonable causes considered, I was the more bokt to take it in hand. and to help me herein I have had sumdry translations, not only in Latin, bus also of the Duteh interpreters, whom (becanse of their singular gifts and special diligence in the lible) I have been the more glad to follow for the most part accorting as was required. But, to say the truth before God, it was neither my labour nor desire to have this work put in my haml; nevertheless, it grieved me that other mations should be more plenteonsly provided for with the ficripture in their mother tongue than we; therefore, when I was instantly required, though I could not do so well as I woull. I thought it yet my duty to do my best, and that with a good will." He also observes in his dedication, " as the Holy Ghost moved other men to do the cost hereef, so was I emboldened in Gorl

[^5]to labour in the same." From this then it appears, that he was desired by others to perform this work; that they supplied him with the pecminary means; that the desire was expressed to him in the year 1534; that the adversity of some better qualified for the undertaking induced him to attempt it; and that he availed himself of other translations in completing his own. It is generally conjectured, and with much probalility, that his patron Cromwell was the chief person who prompted him to the undertaking, and supplied him with funds. It seems almost equally probable that the party alluded to as better qualified than himself was Tyndale, whose adversity, by which his imprisonment most likely is intended, synchronises with the date 1534 , when the desire was expressed to Coverdale that he should set forth a translation. This brings down the preparation of the work for the press to a very late period. and leaves but a very short time for its completion; for it plainly appears from the colophon to the book, that it was fimished 4th October, 1535. Yet, after a very attentive consideration of the matter, we cannot see how, with Coverdale's own statement before us, we can suppose that the translator preciously to that period was engaged on a version with an express view to its publication. We are fully aware of the difliculty which presses on this view of the case, arising from the very limited space of time assigned to Coverdale for completing so great a work; but that difticulty is considerably diminished by the following considerations: that according to our view of his history he hat been for some time engaged in the study of the Holy Scriptures iu the original; that most likely for his own private purposes, or with some general view to future usefulness, he had previously made and preserved translations of some parts of the Bible, a supposition by no means inconsistent with the modest terms in which he speaks of his attainments;* that by his own acknowledgment he availed himself of the aid afforded by existing versions; and especially that he would avail himself of Tyndale's translation in those portions of the saered volume which that noble veteran had already published. Though we have somewhat modified our views as to the actual amount of Coverdale's labour duxing the space in question, since we wrote some years ago the sketch of EnglishTranslations aud Translators, we are still of opinion that he accomphished a herculean task. He looked at immortal souls and felt that their welfare waited on his labours; he looked into eternity and saw that the bible was the ouly star which entightened its gloom; he looked up to God and found in Him an all-sufficient helper iu the task he had undertaken.

Coverdale mentions in his prologue sundry translations in Latin and Dutch, from which he had derived assistance, and in another place he limits the number to five-what translations he referred to by this acknowledgment it is very natural to inquire, but very difficult to determine. The Vulgate of course was included; the three versions executed by Paguinus, Leo Juda, and Lather are probably to be added, but as to the fifth, whether it were the Bible of Rudelius, or the Dutel version of 1526, or the Lower Saxon one of 1533 , we are at a loss to decide; $\dagger$ perhaps his reason for passing over in silence his large obligations to Tyndale's published versions, was that he felt any acknowledgment of assistance derived from that quarter would be prejudicial to the success of his work, as Tyndale and his translations had been denounced by the ruling powers in England. As to the place where our translator printed the volume, the question, like so many others connected with the origin of the version, can only be answered by conjecture. From a resemblance which the woodcuts bear to those found in Egenolph's books printed at Frankfort, it has been supposed by some that it was executed there; while others again, from the similarity of the type to that whieh is used in books printed by Forschover at Zurich, have coneluded that he was the printer. Cologne also has been mentioned. Of these Zarich seems to have the best claim to the disputed honour; and to that city it is generally conceded. Could we ascertain that there was the place both of the preparation and printing of the book, the imagination would fondly linger over that cheerful and animated city, - embosomed among vine-clad knolls, meadows and orchards, and surmounted by forests, above and beyond which appear the loftier summits of the Albis," with our trauslator working in some little room, through the live-long day till after the sun had set behind those alpine heights, and then rising to his task again before the same sun gilded the opposite horizon.

[^6]The competency of Coverdale to his task has been satisfactorily proved by Mr. Whitaker in his 'Critieal Enquiry.' His learning, for the age in which he lived, was very considerable-it was aeknowledged by his contemporaries, it is evidenced by his works. The author of the interesting History of Richmondshire, attributes to Coverdale a very curious epitaph, written in Latin, Greek, and Hebres, supposed to belong to the ycar 1538; which, if it were certainly his production, would confirm his elaims to be considered a superior scholar, but most persons, it is apprehended, will feel a little sceptieal about the date, on looking at the eurious relie, and will be inelined to assign it to a later period.* But while the seholarship of Coverdale is placed beyond dispute, it must be acknowledged that there are many renderings in his version so peculiar, that one is at a loss to find his authority for them; and what is still more remarkable, and deeply to be regretted, he differed from Tyndale in using the word penance and amendment, instead of repentance. Highly as we value the labours of Coverdale, we must greatly prefer, not only in this respect but as a whole, the version of his truly illustrious, though by the men of his generation, dishonoured contemporary. Nor ean we help also deeply lamenting the style of extravagant subserviency and fulsome flattery adopted by Coverdale in his dedieation to King Ilenry VIIl; a style of address, which, thongh eharacteristic of the age, reeeived no sanction from anything which proceeded from the pen of Tyndale. It should, however, in justice to Coverdale be added, that if his dedication be objectionable on account of its flattery, his prologue to the reader is worthy of the highest praise, and abounds in beautiful and profitable thought.

The reeeption which Coverdale's version met with on its arrival in England, is deseribed by Fulke, in a report which he gives of part of a sermon which he heard the venerable father deliver in that famous old preaching place, St. Paul's (ross. The story related by Coverdale has been referred by Mr. Anderson to the history of the Bible printed in 1539 at l'aris, under his superintendence: but that Bible was not Coverdale's translation, nor was it ever ealled by his name. It was a revision of Rogers' edition; Coverdale could not have referred to it as his own. The edition of 1535 always went by his name, and would certainly be understood to be meant by the audience who listened to his story. "I myself," says Fulke, "' and so did many hundreds beside, hear that reverend father, M. Doctor Coverdale of holy and learned memory, in a sermon at Paul's C'ross, upon oceasion of some slanderous reports that then were raised against his translation, declare his faithful purpose in doing the same; whieh, after it was fimished and presented to hing Hemry V1II, of famous memory, and by him committed to divers bishops of that time to peruse, of which I remember Stephen Gardiner was one: after they had kept it long in their hands, and the king was divers times suce unto for the publieation thereof; at the last being called for by the king himself they redelivered the book; and being demanded by the king what was their judgment of the translation, they answered that there were many faults therein. 'Well,' said the king, 'but are there any heresies maintained thereby.' They answered 'that there was no heresics that they could find maintained thereby?' 'If there be no heresies,' said the king, 'then in Gud's name let it go abroad among our people.' According to this judgment of the king and the bishops, M1. Coverdale defended his translation, confessing that he did now himself espy some faults which, if he might review it once over again, as he had done twice before, he doubted not but to amend: but for any heresy he was sure there was none maintained by his translation." $\dagger$

Foxe inserts, in his 'Acts and Monuments,' certain imjunctions bearing date 1536, in one of which "every parson or proprietary of any parish chureh" was required to provide a book of the. whole Bible in Latin, and also in English, before the 1st of Angust, to be kaid in the choir. This injunetion is not found in Cranmer's ' Register,' in Wilkins' 'Coneilia,' nor in Burnet's 'Collection of Records,' $\ddagger$ whence it has been coneluded that the elause given by Foxe is an interpolation; but it is far more probable that the clause was copied by the martyrologist from a draft of the [^7]injunctions which, before they were issued and inserted in the 'Register,' underwent alteration. The clause in question, if inserted in the injunctions of 1536 , must have referred to Coverdale's version, as no other version of the whole Bible was then published; and hence, according to the view just taken of the document, it would appear that the king's patronage of the book had been obtained, and that Cromwell prepared an order in fivour of its circulation, but that some eircumstance occurred to prevent the issue of the ingunction. That circumstance probably was the death of Anne Boleyn, who perished on the scaffold in May, 1536, deplored by the friends of the English Reformation, which had been advanced by her intnence, and was now checked by her removal. Lewis mentions a MS. book of devotions in the fumily of Franeis West, Boxley, Kent, whieh once belonged to Amne Boleyn, containing a note in the 'rueen's hand, referring to the "glad tidings of salvation being promulgated, publishet, and set at liberty ly the grace poured into the heart of our prince," which note corroborates the idea ol' Henry having regarded Coverdale's translation with favour before the queen's death; and what more fully confirms and further explains the view we have taken of the case, is a passage contained in a contemporary writer, who informs us that "through the intereession of Gueen Ame, the king at last granted that English Bibles might be printed, and placed in every church where the people might read them. Which eoncession of the king did not then take effect, because shortly after Queen Anne was beheaded."* But though Coverdale's translation never enjoyed the regal patronage of which there was once the promise, it was allowed for awhile to be cirenkated withont hindranee; and if it never attained the popularity so justly acquired by subsequent versions, it enjoyed the honour of taking the lead in the goodly procession of English Bibles which have been so long, and of late in such gloriously augmented numbers, issuing from the press. Nor can we doubt that the reading of it, in multitudes of instances, proved the means of enlightening and regenerating the human mind.

Probably Coverdale was in England in the year 1537, when two works of his were published by Nicholson a printer in Southwark. But the important undertaking to which he devoted himself at this period, and which now claims our particular attention, was the superintendence of the printing of the great Bible.

Natthew's Bible appeared in 1537 ; it contained the whole of the version which had been prepared by Tyndale. That great man had laboured at the work in obscurity and exile, and then sealed the truth with his blood, the victim of treachery and malice. The book was edited by his friend Rogers, who soon after followed him, through the fires of martyrdom, to the rewards of heaven. A copy of this translation was conveyed to Crammer, and filled his sonl with joy: he forwarded the version to (romwell. pronouncing it better than any other translation previously made. Cromwell recommended it to the king, who sanctioned it, anthorising it " to be bonght and read within this realm;" thes patronising at last, though unwittingly, the labous of that very man, the honoured Tyndale, whom he had persecuted with relentless ernelty. The Bible became extremely popular, and surpassed in the public estimation the translation by ('overdale. But the elergy were not satisfied with it; the prologue and notes were charged with the taint of heresy, and a new translation was desired. ('romwell projected anew translation, which proved in fact a revison of Tyndale's work, the prologues and notes being omitted. This was the great Bible, the preparation of which he committed to Coverdate. The place selected for the printing of this book was Paris, which was eligible on account of the superior workmen and materials to be obtained there. In June, 1538 , Coverdale, and Grafton the printer, who had accompanied him to laris, were hard at work with their men, as the following letter testifies:-

A Letter from Coverdale and Grafton to Cromwell.

" After most humble and hearty commendations to your good lordship. Pleaseth the same to understand, that we be entered into your work of the Bible, whereof (according to our most bounden duty) we have here sent unto your lordship two ensamples; one in parehment, wherein we intend to print one for the king's grace, and another for your lordship; and the second, in paper, whercof all the rest shall be made ; trusting, that it shall be not only to the glory of God, but a singular pleasure also to your good lordship the causer thereof, and a general edifying of the king's subjects, according to your lordship's most godly request. For we follow not only a standing text of the Hebrew, with the interpretation of the Chaldee and the Greek, but we set also, in a private table, the diversity of readings of all texts, with such annotations, in another table, as shall doubtless elucidate and clear the same, as well without any singularity of opinions, as all checkings and reproofs. The print, no doubt, shall please your good lordship; the paper is of the best sort in France. The charge certainly is great, wherein, as we most humbly require your favourable help at this present, with whatsoever it shall please your good lordship to let us have, so trust we, if need require, in our just business to be defended from the papists by your lordship's favourable letters, which we most humbly desire to have (by this bearer, Willian Graye), either to the bishop of Winchester, or to some other whom your lordship shall think most expedient. We be daily threatenci, and look ever to be spoken withal, as this bearer can farther inform your lordship; but how they will use us, as yet we know not. Nevertheless, for our farther assurance, where through we may be the abler to perform this your lordship's work, we are so much the bolder of your good lordship; for other refuge have we none, under God and our king, whom, with noble Prince Edward, and all you, their most honourable council, God Almighty preserve now and ever. Amen.
"Written at Paris the 23rd day of June, by your lordship's assured and daily orators,
" Miles Coverdale.
" Richard Grafton." \%

The Bishop of Winchester was at that time ambassador in France; but he was soon succeeded by Bonner, then arehdeaeon of Leicester, who was directed by (romwell, agreeably to Coverdale's: request, to aid the enterprise. An application was also made by King Henry to his royal brother of Franee to permit the printing of the English Bible in l'aris, to which consent was given, and the royal license was duly issued.

In the autumn the work was going on, as appears from the following letters:-

" After most humble and due salutation to your good lordship. Pleaseth the same to understand that your work going forward, we thought it our most bounden duty to send unto your lordship certain leaves thereof, specially seeing we had so good occasion, by the returning of your beloved servant Sebastian. And as they are done so will we send your lordship the residue from time to time. As tonching the mamner and order that we keep in the same work, pleaseth your good lordship to be advertised, that the mark铛 in the text signifieth, that upon the same (in the latter eud of the book) there is some notable annutations, which we have written without any private opinion, only after the best interpreters of the 1 Iebrews, for the more clearness of the text. This mark $\rho$ betokeneth, that upon the same text there is diversity of reading among the Hebrews, Chaldees, and Greeks, and Latinists, as in a table at the end of the book shall be declared. This mark * showeth that the sentence, written in small letters, is not in the Hebrew or Chaldee, but in the Latin, and seldom in the Greek, and that we neverthcless, wouth not have it extinct, but highly accept it for the more explanation of the text. This token $\dagger$ in the Old Testament giveth to understand, that the same text which followeth it, is also alleged of Christ or of some apostle in the New Testament. This (among other, our necessary labours) is the way that we take in this work; trusting verily, that as God Almighty moved your lordship to set us unto it, so shall it be to His glory, and right welcome to all them that love to serve Him and their prince, in true faithful obedience. As is only known to the Lord of Heaven, to whom we most heartily pray for your lordship's preservation.

In the preparation of this edition, Coverdale was evidently influenced very much by the principle of expediency, to which he was wont to pay too great regard; and perhaps Cromwell had alsu

[^8]given him directions respecting the course he pursued, with a view to meet the prejudices of the day. lassages from the Vulgate, unauthorised by the original, were introduced into the version, with a distinguishing mark. It gives the great Bible a peculiar character, and without Coverdale's statement in the foregoing correspondence, the supplementary matter with the curious marks prefixed, is calculated to puzzle the mere English reader.

Bonner, though raised to the see of llereford, contimed in his diplomatic appointment at Paris, and to all who are aequainted with the subsequent history of this notorious persecutor, it will appear somewhat surprising, when they are informed by Foxe, that the ambassador encouraged the printing of the English Scriptures, invited the printers to his house, visited them in return, dined with them at home, and generously paid the cost of the entertaimment. But the bishop was willing at this price to secure the good opinion of Cromwell, who, as the special favourite of his prince, had it in his power amply to repay the services of his friends.

The house of "Francis Regnault," some quaint looking building, in the Paris of the sixteenth eentury, in all probability long since fallen to decay, was the seene of the honoured toils of our translator, and the indusirious printers. To this worthy we are introduced by the letter annexed, in which Coverdale and Grafton solicit a favour on his behalf, in acknowledgment of his former kindness, and in the hope of his future service.

A Letter from Coverdale and Grafton to Cromwell.

" After most humble and due salutations to your most honourable lordship. Pleaseth the same to understand, that we are instantly desired of our host (whose name is Francis Regnault, a Frenchman) to make supplication for him, unto your lordship. Whereas of long time he hath been an occupier into England more than forty years, he hath always provided such books for England as they most occupied ; so that he hath a great number at this present, in his hands, as Primers in English, Missals, with other such like, whereof now (by the Company of the Booksellers in London) he is utterly forbidden to make sale, to the utter undoing of the man. Wherefore most humbly we bescech your lordship to be graeious and favourable unto him, that he may have licence to sell those which he hath done already; so that hereafter, he print no more in the English tongue, unless he have an English man that is learned, to be his corrector, and that is the man well contented withal. He is also contented and hath promised before my lord elect of Hereford, that if there be found any notable fanlt in his books, he will put the same out, and print the leaf again. Thus are we bold to write unto your lordship in his cause (as doth also my lord clect of Hereford), beseeching your lordship to pardon our boldness and to be good lord unto this honest man. whose servant shall give attendance upon your lordship's most favourable answer. If your lordship show him this bencfit, we shall not fare the worse in the readiness and due expedition of this your lordship's work of the Bible, which goeth well forward, and within few months will draw to an end, by the graee of Almighty God, who preserve your good lordship, now and evermore.

The year was drawing to a close, $\dagger$ and with it the noble work in which Coverdale felt so deep an interest. The printers were probably engaged on the last sheet or two, and the superintendent of the press was anxious to ascertain his patron's pleasure, concerning the annotations proposed to be introduced, a circumstance, by the way, which shows how completely the preparation of this volume was under Cromwell's control; so much so, that it ought in justice to bear his name.

* State Papers, Cromwell Correspondence, Vol I. No. II5.
$\dagger$ A letter to Cromwell dated 30 th October, is preserved among the State Papers. It relates entirely to a eharge of disloyalty against a Mr. Beckynsall, whom Coverdale knew, and whose character he vindicates. "Neither," he says, "do I understand otherwise but at this present hour all we that be here of the king's nation are even of one heart and humble mind toward God and ou sovereign."
or no. Pity it were that the dark places of the text, (upon the which I have always set a hand), should so pass undeclared. As for any private opinion or contentious words, as I will utterly avoid all such, so will I offer the annotations first to my said lord of Hereford, to the intent that he shall so examine the same, afore they be put in print, if it be your lordship's good pleasure that I shall so do. As concerning the New Testaments in English and Latin, whereof your good lordship received lately a book by your serrant Sebastian, the cook, I beseech your lordship to consider the greenness thereof, which (for lack of time) eannot as yet be so apt to be bound as it should be : and whereas my said lord of Hercford is so good unto us to convey this much of the Bible to your good lordship, I humbly beseech the same to be defender and kecper thereof; to the intent that if these men proceed in their cruelness against us and confiscate the rest, yet this at the least may be safe by the means of your lordship, whom God the Almighty evermore prescrve to his good pleasure. Amen.
"Written somewhat hastily, at Paris the 13th day of December. Your humble and faithful servitor.
" Miles Coyerdale." *
The English and Latin Testaments referred to were of an edition which we shall hereafter notice; it is more to our present purpose to mark the indications which the letter gives of rising troubles. The work had proceeded smoothly-it was now to be interrupted. Clouds were gathering, dark and portentous, and soon the tempest burst. Before the letter could reach its destination, there came forth, in the name of the Inquisitor-General in Paris, an instrument, dated 17th December, 1538, prohibiting poor Francis Regnanlt, and all others whom it might concern, from completing the said Bible in the vulgar Britannic tongue, and from making away with or concealing the shects already printed, unless they were seen by this same inquisitor. The Englishmen were summoned to attend before this ecclesiastical tribunal, which had thus dared to raise itself in opposition to the royal prerogatives: but stricken with terror, they made a hasty retreat, leaving behind them the unfinished sheets, which were seized by the inquisitors and doomed to the flames; but the lieutenantgeneral, whose horror of heresy was surpassed by his love of gain, preferred to sell a quantity of them for waste paper; and they became the property of a haberdasher, who bought them, says Foxe, " to lap caps in." But they were destined to a nobler use: Grafton providentially recovered them, and thus completed many of the copies of the Bible which had previously been sent over to England. The repurchase of the haberdasher's sheets appears, from what Foxe says, not to have been effected till the latter part of the year 1539 ; but we find from existing copics that the book was "finyshed in April, anno 1539," whence we are to conclude that the part which was wanting to complete the work was printed in London, and that some copies were perfected before the recovery of sueh part of the edition as had fallen into the haberdasher's hands. It may be added, that it seems a much smaller portion of the work was destroyed than is generally supposed; inasmuch, as the recovered sheets were sufficient to fill "four great dry fats."

Cranmer's name has gencrally been comnected with this "great Bible," but without reason. IIe wrote a preface for the new edition of it published in $1540, \dagger$ but he does not appear to have had any thing to do with its original preparation. Cromwell and Coverdale were the persons to whom the credit and honour of the work must be assigned, the former having projected, and the latter having executed the undertaking. The volume exhibits a revision of Natthew's Bible, and though the renderings often differ very considerably from those in Coverdale's version, it is not improbable that he was the reviscr.

The patron of this great work, who, with his manifold infirmities of elaracter, evinced a deep regard for the word of God, and a warm desire for its circulation, took steps to secure that important object as soon as the great Bible was complete, by issuing injunctions to the clergy, enjoining upon them to provide the whole Bible of the largest volume in English, and set up the same in some convenient place within their churches, that their parishoners might commodiously resort to the same and read it. $\ddagger$

Great was the delight diffused throngh the community, by this eoncession of a spiritual right of which they had been long iniquitonsly debarred. "It was wonderful," says Strype, " to see with [^9]what joy this book of God was received, not only among the learneder sort, and those that were noted for lovers of the Reformation, but generally all England over by the vulgar and common people, and with what greediness God's word was read, and what resort to places where the reading of it was. Every body that could, bought the book, or busily read it, or got others to read it to them, if they could not themselves; and divers more elderly people learned to read on purpose; and even little boys flocked among the rest to hear portions of the Holy wicriptures read." Both the eye of the poet, and the heart of the saint, must love to linger over the seene of the grey-headed sire, and the child with his curly locks, gathering round the well-spring of divine truth, and slaking their thirst at the living waters. The reading of the Bible in Old St. Paul's,* and in the aisles of many a eathedral and parish church, in the England of the sixteenth century, is one of those beautiful associations with the history of the olden time which an English protestant must fondly eherish.

The following letter to Cromwell by our translator refers to the license which had been granted to Nicholson to sell Bibles and Testaments, and solicits a similar license for the same person to print certain sermonst which Coverdale had prepared for the press, and which had been revised by the Archbishop of Canterbury. It probably belongs to the early part of the year $1539 . \ddagger$
"After due consideration to your good lordship, I heartily and in most humble wise beseech the same, that inasmuch as the king's most excellent majesty, of his singular grace (by the means of your good lordship as God's instrument in that behalf) hath granted unto this bearer, James Nycolson, his gracious license and privilege, for the sale of his Bibles and Now Testaments already printed; and forasmuch as his grace is also informed, and hath seen a part of our postils, or ordinary sermons, which the lord archbishop of Canterbury hath corrected, your lordship, according to your most loving and farourable manner of old, will help and further the said James Nycolson, to the kings most gracious privilege for certain years to print the same, considering the cost and charge that he hath had, not only for drawing of the said sermons out of Scripture, but also in preparing now of his letters and print for the setting forth of the same. This I most humbly require of your lordship, whom God preserve now and ever. Amen.

> "Your lordship's humble and daily orator, Myles Coverdale."

Before Coverdale left London for Paris, it seems that he arranged the plan of a Diglot Testament in Latin and Enghish, which he left his friend Nicholson to publish. Ile wrote the dedication, and permitted the use of his name in conneetion with the book. But when the volume reached him, he found it had been most carelessly edited and printed, and was " both base, insensible, and clean contrary not only to the phrase of our langnage, but also from the understanding of the text in Latin." He therefore repudiated the work, and prepared another edition himself, which was printed in Paris, and published with the special approval of Bishop Bonner. The book was dedieated to Cromwell, and Coverdale explains in that dedication the history of Nicholson's ineorreet edition. The English printer, however, was bent on securing his own profit, and therelore published himself a new edition of the Diglot, and gave the name of "Johan Hollybushe" on the title-page.

It was probably in the year $1539 $$ that Coverdale was employed in Perkshire, in the service of his early friend and patron Thomas Cromwell, who had now attained to the dignity of Lord Privy Seal. The subjoined letters, while they prove Coverdale's zeal and activity in searehing for popish publications, and in suppressing the worthip of one of England's most popular saints, Thomas of Canterbury, also shed a very interesting light upon the character and proccedings of those times.

[^10]"After my most humble and due salutation to your right honourable lordship, this is to advertise the same, that for lack of diligent inquisition and through overmuch sufferance there are in these countries (and so I fear me in many more) an innumerable sort of such popish books, as not only be incorrect, but are also great occasion to kecp the king's subjects still in error, and to make them fall into such like inconvenience as did lately one John Cowper, whose accusation I trust your lordship hath received (or shall do) this week by the justice, in consideration of the premises I have (under your lordship's favourable correction) required the curate of Newbury to call for all such books as were either incorrect or against the king's most lawful act concerning Thomas a Becket, or the Bishop of Rome, by the means of the which request there are brought unto me in these two or three days a great number of such books; wherefore inasmuch as I perceive that this doth turn to the glory of God and to the honour of our most noble king, I humbly require your lordship to grant me authority, and to give me a charge and commandment by your letters, that wheresoever I understand any such unlawful books to be, I may correct them or cause them to be corrected. In the executing whereof I do not doubt bat to win the parties, and to make them not only more fervent towards God and his word, but also to increase in due obedience towards the king's highness, whom with noble prince Edward, and you all of their most honourable council the mighty arm of God evermore preserve. "To the right honourable my singular good lord, the Lorl Privy Seal."
"My right humble salutation. Considering my most bounden duty in seeking the honour of the king our sovereign lord, I am constrained to write again unto your good lordship for none other cause so much as to signify unto the same, that as me thinketh (I speak under correction) a great number of the priests of this realm are run in premunire unto the king, inasmuch as they have not utterly extinct all such ecclesiastical service as is against his grace's most lawful supremacy and prerogative, for in the feast called Cathedra St. Peter a great part of their matins is plainly a maintenance of the Bishop of Rome's usurped power. This is evident in all the great matin books of the church of Newbury, and I doubt not but it is so likewise in many churches more. I found it the 7th day of this month, and I wonder at it, considering that it is so long since the act was made for the abolishing of all such usurped authority. This, my very dear and singular good lord, do I open and show only minto your lordship, neither doth any man else in the world know that I have uttered this thing, no, not this bearer, good Mr. Wynchcombe, unto whom (for his true heart towards the king's highness, and love towards your lordship) I might utter right secret things. The ever living God that never failed your good lordship guide the same in doing the thing that is to his glory, and to the honour of our most gracious king. Amen. If it be your lordship's good pleasure I shall do anght further herein, I humbly bescech you to know the same by writing, or otherwise by the mouth of Mr. Wynchcombe.

"To the right honourable and my very singular good lord, the Lord Privy Seal. This to be delivered, ad manus."
"In my most humble wise with like salutation to your right honourable lordship, this is to signify unto the same that, this 4th day of March, one Nicolas Hyde, and one John Gryese, of Henley-uponThames, came to me unto Newbury, reporting that in a glass window of our Lady Chapel, in the Church of the said Henley, the image of Thomas à Becket, with the whole feigned story of his death, is suffered to stand still: not only this, but that all the beams, irons, and candlesticks (whereupon tapers and lights were wont to be set up unto images) remain still untaken down, whereby the poor simple, unlearned people believe that they shall have liberty to set up their candles again unto images, and that the old fashion shall shortly return. Item, that one Thomas Woolley, of Henley, did forbid five of his neighbours his house for holding with the gospel, and said that he hat evil will for receiving such men of the new learning. So that, in the said town of Henley, poor mon are not only discouraged from the truth of Gorl, but it appeareth also that the king's most gracious commandment is not put in exceution. Now though Sir Walter Stoner,* knight, be the king's justice of peace at Henley, yet (under your lordship's correction) I reckon great and [^11]notable negligence in the Bishop of Lincoln, who being so nigh thereby doth not weed out such faults; yea. I fear it be as evil or worse in many more places of his diocese.

"It is my duty also to signify unto your good lordship, the great oversight of the stationers of London, who for their lucre and gains are not ashamed to sell still such primers as corrupt the king's subjects. A great number of them have my neighbours brought unto me, and a great sort of other most ungracious popish books (both contrary to God and the king's highness) have I taken up within the precincts of Newbury, and will do more, if your good lordship will give me authority, or bid me do it. Whereof I humbly beseech you (my most dear and singular good lord), to have your loving answer by the mouth of this bearer, young Mr. Wyncheombe, and to know your good pleasure what I shall do with these popish books that I have already, whether I shall burn them at the Market Cross or no. Thus the everlasting God preserve your good lordship long to endure. Amen.
"From Newbury, 5th day of March. Your humble and faithful servant,
"Myles Coverdale.
"To the right honourable and my very singular especial good lord, the Lord Privy Seal. This to be presented, ad manus." \%

In the course of 1540 , probably about the time that he lost his patron Cromwell, he went to Crermany, where for some time he resided. Tubingen became the place of his abode, and from the university of that city he received a diploma conlerring on him the distinction of doctor of divinity. He was now chielly dependent for support on literary labour, and the education of the young. During the lifetime of Cromwell, his resources probably had been supplied by the bounty of that extraordinary man. When the latter fell a victim to the resentment of his capricious master, our translator lost a friend to whom he was under many temporal obligations, and a patron whose influence somewhat affected the independence of his character, and guided his proceedings to a greater extent than was desirable. Coverdale seems to have leancd too much on Cromwell, to have submitted too implicitly to his directions: to have deferred too humbly to the judgment of that politic minister. He certainly did not possess that bold independence of mind which marked the course of his distinguished contemporary, Tyndale. The latter had the self-erectness of the oak, the former, like the vine, appeared to need some outward prop. After Coverdale left Tubingen he went to reside in the dominions of the duke of Deux-ponts, and being well skilled in the German language, and a man of literary and theological reputation, he was favourably noticed by the duke, and appointed to the benefice of Bergzabern. During his stay on the continent, but at what time or place cannot be ascertained, he married a pius woman, the sister of a lady, the wife of Macchabrus Alpinus, a distinguished Scotchman, who held a high appointment under the king of Denmark. Coverdale thus took a step which thoroughly identified him with the reformers who had abjured the celibacy of the priesthood, as one of the great evils of the church of Rome. About this time, probably, he wrote and published his translation of C'alvin's treatise on the Sacrament, to which he subjoined " the order that the church and eongregation ol Christ in Denmark doth use." At the elose of which tract he remarks, "Let no man be slack in his duty ; but give God that which is his, and to the king the things that belongeth unto him." "This I say to stop the mouths and the blasphemous tongues of such as will not cease to rail on men, and to slander me (yea, even to the king's majesty), as though I were a perverter of common order, or took upon me to change the laws and to make new statutes. Nay, ye ungodly hypocrites, not so, but as I am sure that there is heavy damnation laid up for all such subjects as rebel or make sedition against the prince, or disobey the least commandment of God in their sovereign, even so I am assured that there is no less damnation prepared for those rulers or heads that make unjust laws and cruel statutes, to maintain their own lusts and oppress the poor."

In 1547 he was again in England, holding the appointment of almoner to Queen Catherine. It this time he enjoyed a high reputation for his learning and picty, and was one of the persons cmployed in the preparation of Erasmus's paraphrase of the New 'Testament for the use of English readers. He wrote the dedication of the second volume to Edward VI, and prefixed Tyndale's prologue to the epistle to the Romans, thus evincing the estimation in which he held the labours of his departed fellow exile. Probably he translated the former part of the volume as far as the end of the epistle to the Galatians.

Coverdale continued in the service of Catherine till her death, which happened in September, 1548. After the decease of Henry she married Lord Seymour, and went to reside at Sudley Castle, Gloucestershire, whither Coverdale accompanied his royal mistress. He officiated at her fumeral, and carefully guarded the persons who were present against supposing that he gave his sanction to the popish ceremonies performed for the dead, some remains of which lingered in the service at these royal obsequies. The preacher requested "that none there should think, say, or spread abroad that the offering which was there done, was done any thing to profit the dead, but for the poor only: and also the lights which were carried and stood about the corpse were for the honour of the person, and for none other intent nor parpose."

After the death of the queen dowager, Coverdale was variously employed. He preached at St. Paul's Cross, on the 27 th of April, 1549 , when some Anabaptists did penance. In the summer of 1550 , when Lord Russel went down into Devonshire, to quell the disturbances which arose from both civil and religions disaffection to the existing government, Coverdale accompanied the army, with the view of subduing the popular mind to obedience and loyalty, by the gentle influence of argument and expostulation. After the victory of Exeter, he celebrated the event in a thanksgiving sermon. For these services, according to an entry in the comeil book of Edward VI, 20 th of June, 1550 , Coverdale received the sum of forty pounds. In this year also two new editions of our translator's Testament were printed, and one of the Bible. On the 18th of Jamuary, l551, he was put upon a commission for the seizure and trial of heretics; a commission which was the renewal of a former one, unhappily distinguished by its intolerant proceedings against the unfortnnate Joan of lient. The new commission proceded in the footsteps of the old one, and doomed to the stake a Dutch Arian. What part Coverdale took in the proceedings of the commission, or whether he took any part in them at all, we cannot determine. For the honow of his character, we hope that no considerations induced the reformer to implicate his name in the performance of deeds which must have been revolting to his benevolent heart; yet we eamot forget that men as kind as he, were so warped by the intolerant spirit of their age that, under the influence of a stern but most mistaken sense of daty, they refused all merey to those whom they had convieted of heretical opinions.

The next glimpse we have of Coverdale is at Westminster, where, on the 7th of Mareh, 1550 (O.S.), we find him preaching a funeral sermon for Lord Wentworth, who had been lord chamberlain, and at whose funcral special honour was done to his memory. Coverdate was on the road to high preferment. His office in the queen dowager's honsehold, and the services he had performed for government, recommended him no doubt to the patronage of those who were in power, while his learning, active habits, and tried zeal in the canse of the Reformation, qualificd him for some distingnished post in the English chuch. As early as the June of the preceding year mention is made in a letter from Peter Martyr then at Cambridge, of the probable promotion of Coverdale to the see of Exeter, in the room of Vesey, who from age and infirmity was unable to perform his episcopal duties. On the 14 th of August, 1551, liing Edward nominated Coverdate to the bishopric, Vesey having been induced to resign. But though by this appointment he was exalted to honour, and became possessed of influence, his pecmiary adrantage was of small amount, as Vesey had alienated the revennes of the see to a very large extent. Indeed, sueh were the straitened crocumstances of Coverdale, that he felt himself compelled to petition the king to relieve him from the payment of the first-fruits. Nor was it without considerable delay that he was able to proceed to his diocese; "such," says Strype, "were at that time the urgent alliirs of state, or the secret hinderers of the gospel." Through Crammer's influence matters were at length arranged; and an the 30th of August, Coverdale was consecrated at Croydon, bishop of Exeter. In the following September he was hicensed to preach; a form which seems to have been necessary even for bishops in those days: and in the same month another and very curious license was granted him, allowing him and his wife Elizabeth, and five or six guests at their table, to eat meat on fast days.*

[^12]On the 6th of October a commission was addressed to eight bishops, of whom Coverdale was one, torether with cight civil and cight common lawyers, directing them to undertake a revision of the ceclesiastical laws of the realm. Strype states* that the commissioners diligently pursued their task, and completed it; but in consequence of the king's early death the contemplated measure of reform was never earried into effect. In the discharge of the secular duties of his episcopal office Coverdale was very diligent, for it appears from the Lords' Journals, in 1552 and 1553 , that he was not absent from the sittings of the House more than three times altogether. But as the whole of the two sessions did not occupy quite four months, these engagements would not detain the bishop very long from lhis diocese, where in the discharge of his spiritual functions he was most exemplary.

The following character of Coverdale, during his residence at Excter, is given by Hoker his contemporary, who was chamberlain of the city. "Ite preached contimually upon every holy day, and did real most commonly twice in the week in some one church or other within this city. He was after the rate of his livings a great keeper of hospitality, very sober in diet, godly in life, friendly to the godly, liberal to the poor, and courtcous to all men, void of pride, full of humility, abhorring covetousness, and an enemy to all wickedness and wicked men, whose company he shumed, and whom he weuld in no wise slroud or have in his house and company. His wife, a most sober, chaste, and igodly matron, his house and household another church in which was exercised all godliness and virtue. No one person being in his house which did not from time to time give an account of his faith and religion, and also did live accordingly; and as he had a care for the grood success in religion, so had he also for the direction of the government in ceclesiastical causes, and becanse he was not skilful therein, neither would be hindered from his godly studies, and be encumbered with such worldly matters, which, nevertheless, he would have be done in all uprightness, justice, and equity; he sent to Oxford for a learned man to be his chancellor, and by the ministry of the writer hereof, he procured and obtained one Master Robert Weston, doctor of the civil law, and afterwards lord chancellor of Ireland, unto whom he committed his consistory, and the whole charge of his ceclesiastical jurisdiction, allowing unto him not only all the fees thereunto appertaining, but also lodged and found him, his wife, lamily, horse and man, within his own house, and gave him a yearly pension of forty pounds. And sucely the bishop was no more godly and careful of his part concerming preaching, but this man also was as diligent and severe in doing of his office without reproach of being affectioned or corrupted. And notrithstanding this good man was a blameless bishop, and lived most godly and virtuous, yet the common people, those old bottles, would receive no wine, could not brook or digest him, for no other canse but because he was a preacher of the gospel, an enemy to papistry, and a married man. Many devices were accounted against him for his confusion, sometimes by false suggestions, sometimes by open railing, and false libels, sometimes by secret backbitings, and in the end practised his death by impoisoning, but by the providence of God, the snares were broken, and he delivered." $\dagger$

In 1550 a new edition of Coverdale's Bible was printed at Zurich, which was the last previous to the first edition in the present form published in 1835. It was reissued with a new title-page in 1533, and "set forth with the king's most gracious license." It must have been one of the last instances in which that license was given, for Edward, after a short and ansious reign, was removed to another world on the 6th of July of the same year. It proved a mournful day for the protestantism of England, and her faithfinl sons were soon made to feel the weight of papal intulerance.

On the $22 n d$ August Coverdale was summoned to appear before the privy council at Richmond, and on the 1st of September he made his appearance, when he was ordered to await the council's further pleasure. On the 28th of the same month Vezey was reinstated in the see of Excter, on the pretence that his previons resignation had been extorted from him by terror. Coverdale, however, though ajecter from his bishopric, was not like the rest of the distinguished reformers committed to prison, but was suffered to remain at large, only giving sureties to appear before the council whenever summoned to do so. Yet the fear of persecution did not induce him to swerve from his steadfistness in the reformel faith, for we discover that when, after the famous public [^13]disputation at Oxford between the popish divines and Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, the other imprisoned brethren signed a declaration, stating their views of truth, and avowing their resolution, "when they cannot obey, but must disobey God, then to submit themselves with all patience and humility, to suffer as the will and pleasure of the higher powers shall adjudge," the faitliful Coverdale shrunk not from signing the document in the following manner, "To these things above said, I, Myles Coverdate, late of Exon, consent and agree with these mine afflicted brethren, being prisoners, with mine own hand." The heroes of the protestant faith just named nobly perished at the stake, but Coverdale, through the mercy of Divine Providence, was permitted to escape.

On the 4th February, 1555, Rogers was led to Smitlifield, the first of the illustrious band who there ascended in " elariots of fire" to heaven. Fourteen days after Rogers's execution, Mary gave her permission to Coverdale to leave the country,-a very remarkable circumstance which requires explanation. He had married a lady who was sister to the wife of Macchabaus Alpinus, at that time chaplain to Christian II, king of Denmark, and professor of theology in the miversity of Copenhagen. He was a man of influence, and a favourite with the Danish sovereign, and through his intercession his royal master was induced to write to Mary on behalf of Coverdale. The king wrote on the 25th of April, 1554 , soliciting the reformer's liberation and pardon, to whiel Mary replied, that Coverdale was under restraint simply on account of certain debts which he owed to the crown. The king rejoined, in a letter dated the 24 th of September, that he was glad it was only a debt that occasioned difficulty, and added that, as the bishopric had not been enjoyed long enough to afford Coverdale the means of paying any thing, his majesty hoped that he would shortly be permitted to visit Denmark, and to "make declaration concerning the benefit of his welfare." Some months passed; Mary seemed unwilling to comply, but it woutd not do for her to disturb the friendly understanding which existed between the English and Danish courts, and therefore she tardily granted in the following February the king's request.

Mr. Anderson, in his valuable work on the Annals of the Bible, suggests that there was another circumstance which contributed to Coverdale's escape.* During the trial of Rogers, Gardiner, who presided over the iniquitous tribunal, on hearing the protomartyr's observation, that the queen "would have done well enough but for Gardiner's council," declared " the queen went before me, and it was her own motion;" of the truth of which we have no doubt, for it is well known that Mary afterwards stimulated Bonner to his deeds of blood. $\dagger$ Mr. A. remarks, that Gardiner's assertion placed the queen before the country in one of the most critical of all positions as the sole and imperative persecutor; and he adds, "there can be no doubt from what followed, had made her tremble not only for herself, but the husband on whom she at this time doated." He alludes to the well known circumstance of a Spanish divine being appointed to preach against religious persecution as a miserable artifice to lull the public mind; and then connects the permission given for Coverdale to leave the comntry with the examination of Rogers, as if it were intended by Dary to counteract the impression produced by Gardiner's remark. It certainly appears very inconsistent with this that the queen should, a few weeks afterwards, permit the work of persecution to be resumed, and doom more victims to the stake $; \ddagger$ and, as to the sermon of the Spanish friar. it scems to have been entirely a device of Philip's to remove odium from himselt, who was suspected of intending to introduce the inquisition to England. There is no evidence of Nlary's interfering in any way at this time to check the persecution, and soothe the minds of her subjects; and, as to the latter objeet, the release of Coverdale was too inconsiderable a circumstance to be likely to aid in its accomplishment. The interference of his Damsh majesty was no doubt the main, if not the only, cause of the translator's liberation.

On the 19 th of February, 1555, Coverdale obtained his pasport, and embarked, no doult with great joy, for the shores of Denmark. Soon after he was gone the lurid flames of persecution blazed over his native land, and sympathy with the sufferers for the truth, many of whom were dualotes: well known to him, and well beloved, must have been mingled with his devout gratitude for the interposition of the Almighty in his escape. He was kindly received by the Danish king, through whose instrmentality he had escaped the "mouth of the lion;" and it is said that his majesty onfered

[^14]him a benefice in the church of Denmark: but Coverdale, unacquainted with the Danish tongue, and anxious to be employed in preaching the gospel, preferred to cast in his lot among some English exiles at Wesel in Friesland. After remaining there a short time, he returned to the former scene of his labours; and on the 15 th of September arrived at Bergzabern, at the request of his old friend, Wolfgang, duke of Deux-ponts. On the 15 th of December, 1558, we find him at Geneva, where le joined in writing* a letter to the church at Frankfort, congratulating them on the aceession of Elizabeth to the English throne, and entreating them to lay aside their present dissensions respecting ceremonial matters, the continuance of which would give so much joy to their enemies. The churches of the English exiles on the continent were at the time much distracted by controversies on points of ceremony and discipline; but there is no evidence of Coverdale having had any connection with them, save in the way indicated by the letter above noticed. It was in accordance with his gentle spirit to inculcate lessons of peace, though his well known attachment to the cause of scriptural truth evinced that he regarded the wisdom which cometh from above as "pure," and not permitting him to sacrifice principle in order to be " peaceable."

The name of Coverdale has sometimes been associated with the Genevan New Testament, published in 1557 , but it is highly improbable that he was at Geneva so soon. The Genevan Testament, as appears from the preface, was the work of one person, a fact strangely overlooked by many authors, and this person there is good reason to believe was William Whittingham. $\dagger$ That he had some share in assisting the preparation of the Genevan Bible is not altogether improbable, as he was there a few months while the work was going on; but the principal part of the undertaking certainly rested with others, probably Whittingham, Gilby, and Sampson. $\ddagger$

The accession of Elizabeth to the throne of England was a signal for the return of the protestant exiles, and among the rest, Coverdale soon found his way to his native land. On the 12 th of November, 1559 , Coverdale again took his place in the old pulpit of St. Paul's Churchyard, where the friends of the Reformation now once more gladly assembled to hear the faithful and warmhearted instructions of their favourite teachers. The next notice of our reformer is discovered in connection with Archbishop Parker's consecration, in which ceremony Coverdale, with Barlow, Scory, Bate, and the suffragans of Bedford and Thetford, took a part. From this it would appear that Coverdale was still regarded as a bishop of the charch of England, his deprivation in the reign of Mary being treated as illegal. It seems probable that the intention was to restore this old veteran to his diocese at Exeter, but that his conscientious scruples in reference to certain ceremonial matters enforced in the English church under Elizabeth, prevented him from enjoying his former dignity. At the consecration of Parker he appeared in a plain black gown, while his episcopal brethren were arrayed in surplices; and to the the end of his life it is well known that he retained his dislike to what he considered popish vestments. But though his conscience would not allow him fully to conform to the established order of things in the church, and he was thereby exchuded from his former see, yet he does not seem to have relinquished his title to the episcopal character, for he signed himself throughout the rest of hife, "Myles Coverdale, quondam Exoniensis."

Grindull, the bishop of London, was a friend to Coverdale. He sought to obtain for him the bishopric of Llandaff, looking upon him as a neglected man, and thinking perhaps that conformity to ecclesiastical laws about vestments might in his case be very well dispensed with. On the failure of other plans for his promotion and comfort, Grindall at length succeeded in making some provision for him by giving him the living of St. Magnus, near London-bridge. He was collated to the rectory on the 3rd of March, 1563 ; but poverty still clung to lim, for he could not pay the firstfruits due to the queen. He wrote to Archbishop Parker the following letter on the subject.
"My duty considered in right humble and faithful wise. These are in like manner to bescech your grace, most reverend father, and my singular good lord, that as my good lord of London, tendering as well my weak and feeble age, as also my poor travail in God's husbandry within his diocese, hath most gently conferred upon me the benefice of St. Magnus in London, being in value an hundred marks or thereabouts

[^15]so it may please your grace to join with his lordship in suit for me to the queen's most excellent majesty, that in favourable consideration how destitute I have been of a competent living in the realm ever since my bishopric was violently taken away from me. I being compelled to resign, and how I never had pension, annuity, or stipend of it, these ten years : how unable also I am either to pay the first-fruits, or long to enjoy the said benefice, going upon my grave, as they say, and not like to live a year. Her majesty, at the contemplation of such reverend, honourable, and worthy suitors, will most graciously grant me her warrant and discharge for the first-fruits of the said benefice. And as I am bold most humbly to crave your grace's help herein, so am I fully persuaded, God willing, to show myself again as thankful, and in my vocation, during my short time, as faithful and as quiet as I can. Thus having uttered my boldness, I most humbly commit your grace and all yours to the mighty protection of God. From London, Jan. 29.
"Myl. Cov. quond. Exon."
The following letter relates to the same subject, and forms another affecting memorial of the poverty and sorrow of this eminent servant of Christ.

Bishop Coverdale to Sir William Cecil.

"My daty considcred in right humble wise unto your honour. These are in like manner to beseech the same, that whereas my lord of London, tendering as well mine age as my simple labours in the Lord's harvest, hath very gently offered me the pastoral office and bencfice of St. Magnus in London; even so it may please your honour to be means for me to the Queen's most excellent Majesty, that in favourable consideration, not only how destitute I have been ever sith my bishopric was taken from me, and that I never had pension, annuity, or stipend of it these ten years and upward; but also how unable I am, either to pay the first-fruits, or long to enjoy the said living, I going upon my grave, not able to live over a year, her Majesty at the contemplation hereof may most graciously grant me the first-fruits of the said benefice. which her highness must needs have again anew, when I am gone.
"Heretofore (I praise God for it!) your honour hath ever been my special help and succour in all my rightful suits. If now, that poor old Myles may be provided for, it please your honour to obtain this for me, I shall think this enough to be unto me as good as a feast. Thus most humbly beseeching your honour to take my boldness in good part, I commit you, and all yours, to the gracious protection of the Almighty. " From London, February 6th, [1564].
"Miles Coverdale, quond. Exon."
Poor Coverdale! Ilis Divine Master, for wise and gracious purposes permitted him to struggle with many trials in his old age, for in the same year in which he was so teazed by poverty, he was smitten with the plague, from which, through the goodness of God, he was restored and was permitted to resume his ministerial labours. It might have been expected that the remainder of his days would be spent in the enjoyment of peace and honour. He was now settled in his rectory, beloved by his parishioners, and lighly esteemed by the friends of the Reformation. The University of Cambridge, in the year 1563 , had conlerred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity; and in the following year, had commissioned lim as a deputy to confer a similar honour on Bishop Grindall; but despite of his piety, labours, usefulness, honour, and old age, this devoted servant of God was soon involved in dificulties again, owing to the stringent enforcement, by the ruling powers, of the ecclesiastical regulations relating to habits and ceremonics. A letter written on the 25 th March, I566, indicates that the veteran reformer was in trouble through his conscientious seruples about conformity to these regulations, and gives us some idea of his inereasing infirmities.

Bishop Coverdale to the Rev. Mr. Robinsong Chaplain to Arcibishop Paiker.

"My duty considered in right humble and most hasty wise. Whereas, I am summoned to appear, with others, to-morrow afore my lord's grace, at Lambeth, 1 beseech your worthiness to be means for me unto his grace, that at this present I may be dispensed with; not only for that I am unwieldy, and could neither well travel by land, nor altogether safely by boat, but also for other considcrations which this bearer, my dear friend, shall signify unto you by mouth. Thes being desirous of your gentle answer, 1 conmend you and all yours to the gracious protection of God. March 25 th, 1566.
" Your own in the Lord.
" Miles Coverdale.

In the July of the same year he united with Humphrey and Sampson, two distinguished Puritans, in writing a letter to Farrell, Viret, Beza, and other divines on the continent, respecting the vestmentariau controversy, which, as it exhibits the opinions of Coverdale on the subject, and throws light upon his position at this time, we shall venture to insert, though it be rather long.

Myles Coverdale, Laurence Humphiey, and Thomas Sampson, to William Farrell, Peter Viret, Theodore Beza, and others.

"We must not only, honoured masters and brethren, appear troublesome to your reverences by so frequently addressing you by our friends and our letters, but must seem also very regardless of our duty to the church, by disturbing you, who are occupied in matters of far greater importance, with the relation of our trifles. But yet the unhappy condition of our times, and fresh troubles, compel us to have recourse to you, not only that you may be informed more fully of the state of our affairs, and our own opinions respecting them, but that we also may more fully understand your sentiments. Our affairs are not altered for the better, but alas! are sadly deteriorated. For it is now settled and determined, that an unleavened cake must be used in place of common bread; that the communion must be received by the people on their bended knees; that out of doors must be worn the square cap, bands, a long gown, and tippet; while the white surplice and cope are to be retained in divine service. And those who refuse to comply with these requirements, are deprived of their estates, dignities, and every ecclesiastical office; namely, brethren, by brethren and bishops, whose honses are at this time the prisons of some preachers; who are now raging against their own bowels; who are now imposing these burdens not only on their own persons, but also on the shoulders of others; and this too at a time when in the judgment of all learned men they ought to have been removed and abolished altogether. Thus you have the image and representation, such as it is, of our church. Now then, hear our opinion upon this state of things. We think that it must be assumed in this question, that the Jewish, Turkish, Christian, and Popish religions have each their own peculiar sacraments and signs ; and that external profession ought to be the test and badge of any one's doctrine ; and that we are to seek our pattern not out of the cisterns and puddles of our enemies, but from the fountain of the Scriptures, and of the churches of God; so as not to be connected by any similarity of rites with those from whose religion we are altogether abhorrent; which rule we read, was diligently observed by our forefathers in respect to the sabbath and passover of the Jews, the fastings of the Manichees, and the trine immersion of heretics. Nor, indeed, can we regard these things as altogether indifferent, when compulsion is made use of, and when too, they are branded with the mark of superstition; nor ought anything to he obtruded (on the church) by the anthority of the sovereign, without its having been lawfully discussed in a Christian synod: nor ought agreement in ceremonies everywhere to be required of necessity, especially when it is in common with the enemies of the faith : nor is there any occasion in the church of Christ either for the Aaronic priesthood, or pharisaical ambition, that sacred garments should be worn now-a-days in the Christian temple. or that a dress not common, but distinct and peculiar, should be prescribed for ordinary use. But we think with Celestine, that the clergy should be distinguished from the people by their doctrine, not their garments; their conversation, not their dress ; their purity of mind, not their adornment of person; lest we begin to hanker after novelties, tread under foot the order received from our forefathers, impose upon the minds and eyes of the simple, and make room for vain and unprofitable superstitions. Besides, as many of us as have cast out these things from the churches committed to our trust, cannot restore them without grievous offence and abominable impiety: and since a door would also be opened to other mysteries of iniquity, and the love of the godly be offended, and the pride and boldness of the wicked be encouraged, without even any pretence of edification; and since it is not lawful, according to St. Paul's rule respecting things indifferent, for every one to rest in his own persuasion, but that that should be regarded as lawful which is not displeasing to certain men; we considered it more for the good of the church to stand fast in our liberty with an accession of godly men on our side, than to depart from the opinion we have taken up, and the custom we have received, to the seandal of many, and the downfall of purer doctrine. This is our opinion, and also that of a most exeellent personage. We now, most illustrious and very dear masters and brethren, request you by our most intimate communion in Christ, to point out the eynosure to us who are tossed abont on the waves; and either to show us a better way if we are in error, or confirm us, when doubting, in our holy purpose. The question, we confess, is nice and difficult, whether it is better to yield to circumstances, or to depart : to admit the relics of the Amorites, or to desert our post? Either alternative is harsh, grievous, and productive of mischief both to ourselves and the church. Which is the better do you with your wonted wisdom declare, because we are lingering in suspense as in the last extremity. We also request of you and your brother ministers to put forth at the earliest opportunity some treatise on the nature of things indifferent, on ceremonies, on the sacerdotal habit; by which both our church and those of Saxony may be instructed, and the zeal of our sovereigns inspirited to the demolition of all the distinctive marks of antichrist. We make it, lastly, our request, that you would admonish our bishops by letter not to persecute Joseph on account of a garment; nor to rend the church with such a schism for so slight a cause; but that even in the dissimilarity of rites they may preserve the sweetest harmony of spirit and brotherly love. For far be it from us to think of them otherwise than as becomes friends and brethren. The sum is this. We request these three things; your reply to the questions here proposed by us, and some treatise to all the churches generally; a letter to the bishops privately, and, if you please, to such of her majesty's councillors as you may be acquainted with, so that this whole controversy may issue in a christian reconciliation, and not in a cruel separation. Communicate this letter to all your brethren, that we may hear what the Lord may speak out of the mouth of two or three witnesses. May the Lord Jesus preserve his church pure and inviolate even to the day of his just judgment! Your most devoted,
" July, 1566.
" Myles Coverdale, formerly bishop of Exeter,
" Laurence Humphrey,
"Thomas Sampson."*
Coverdale forfeited his benefice by conscientiously refusing to obey the act of uniformity, bnt he still continued to preach. "Many of the people," says Strype, " ran after Father Coverdale, who took that occasion to preach the more constantly, but yet with much fear, so that he would not be known where he preached, though many came to his house to ask where he would preach the next Lord's day." He continued his labours till within a few months of his departure to a better world, which happened the 20th of May, 1567, in the 81 st year of his age. He was buried in the church of St. Bartholomew, behind the Royal Exchange, and his funcral was attended by multitudes who revered his memory and bewailed his loss.

When the Church of St. Bartholomew was pulled down in 1840, careful search was made for Coverdale's remains: they were discovered in a grave within the chancel. A particular account of the exhumation was drawn up, from which it appears that the skeleton was perfect, the skull alone being decomposed. The coffin was removed to the church of' St. Mary Magnus, and now the bones of the translator repose within the walls which one echoed with his voice.

Douche and Latyn," was no doubt a bookselling artifice of the time, to make the work eirculate better, as being intimately connceted with the reformed doctrines, which were then equally well known by the term of German or Dutch doctrines. Nay, we are even told that the early reformers of that day were commonly called Germans, on account of their adoption of those reformed opinions which first sprung up in Germany. That Coverdale did not follow Lather's version, it only requires a very slight comparison of texts to prove; but he no doubt availed himself, where there occurred any difficult reading, of all the different means of assistance within his power, as indeed he himself intimates in his prologue to the reader.

The wood-cuts surrounding the title are the same as in the title-page of 1536 , of which a faesimile is prefixed to the present reprint.

On the reverse of the title is, "The bokes of the whole Byble, how they are named in Englysh and Latyn, how longe they are wrytten in the allegacions, how many chapters euery boke hath, and in what leafe cerery one begynneth." It contains, however, only references to the first four parts; those to the Apocrypha and the New Testament were probably on another leaf, which is missing in this copy (the Museum one).

Then comes the dedication, "Vnto the most victorious Prynce and oure most gracyous soueraigne Lorde, kynge Henry the eyght, kynge of Englonde and of Fraunce, lorde of Irlonde, &e." signed "Youre graces humble subiecte and daylye oratour, Myles Coucrdale." 5 pages. The Musenm copy has "Quene Anne" in the dedication; Sion College has "Quene Jane;" Lambeth Library has a copy with each; the Bodlcian has "Quenc Anne;" All Souls" College has neither; Dr. Coombe's has neithcr; the late Mr. Coombes's has "Quene Anne."

Then "A prologe. Myles Couerdale Unto the Christen reader." 6 pages.

Then "The bokes of the hole Byble" &c., 2 pages. This is evidently part of another edition inserted in this copy (the Museum one), or rather this set of preliminary pieces do not belong to this title-page; since a portion of the same information is to be found printed on the reverse of the title-page.

The contents of "The first boke of Moses," I page.
"The first boke of Moses, called Genesis." Then should come, aceording to Herbert, a map of the Holy land. The four other hooks of Moses follow, with tables of contents prefixed to each: in all, fol. i -xe. Signature a i, to p vi, in sixes. The first leaf appears not to have any signature, or else it has been rubbed out in this copy (the Museum one), the second leaf being marked a ii.

Then comes a title-page: "The seconde parte of the olde Testament." with the names of the books contained underneath. This in a compartment of wood-cuts. On the reverse "The boke of Josua. What this hoke conteyneth." Joshua to Hester, fol. ii-cexx (the reverse of). Tables of contents at the commencement of each book. Signature a a ij, to v v ri, in sixes.
"The boke of Job," table of contents. "The Psalter." "The Pronerbes of Salomon," table of contents. "Ecelesiastes," table of contents. "Salomons Ballettes." From Job to Salomons Balettes, fol. i-lii. Signature A a, to Ji iiij, in sixes.

Then comes another title-page: "All the Prophetes in Englishe." with the names of the books contained, underneath. This in a comparment of woodcuts. On the reverse, the contents of "the Prophet Esay." The contents prefixed to each Prophet. In all, fol. ii-cii, (the reverse of). Signature A a a ij, to R r r vi, in sixes.

Another title-page: "Apocripha The bokes and treatises which amonge the fathers of olde are not rekened to be of like authorite with the other bokes of the byble, neither are they foude in the Canon of the Hebrue." Then follow the names of the books. At the bottom, "Vnto these also belongeth Baruc, whom we haue set amoge the prophetes next into Jeremy, because he was his serybe, and in his tyme." This in a compartment of wood-euts. On the reverse, "The translatoure vnto the reader." containing some observations on the nature of these books. Underneath the contents of the first book. The contents are prefixed to each book, except to "Certayne chapters of Hester." "The songe of the iij children." "The story of Susanna" and "The story of Bel," In all, fol, ii-lxxxiii (the reverse of), falsely numhered lxxxi. Signature $A$ ij to $O v$, in sixes, the last leaf blank.

Then the title-page: " The new testament." underneath, the books named. Also in a compartment of wood-cuts. On the reverse, the eontents of "The gospell of S. Mathew." The contents before each book. In all, fol. ii-cxiii (the reverse of). Signature $A A \mathrm{ij}$, to $\mathrm{T} T \mathrm{v}$, in sixes.

On the reverse of the last leaf; "Prynted in the yeare of oure LORDE M.D.XXXV. and fynished the fourth daye of October."

At the beginning of Genesis are six cuts in wood, describing the six days' work of the creation; and in different parts of the work are other cuts, also in wood, some of them very spirited and well executed, representing the history therein mentioned, and most probably done, as before stated, by Sebald Behem of Nurembergh. There are also some initial letters of a very elegant character, from designs of Holbein.

This Bible, as will be seen by the above description, is divided into six parts, of which four have separate title-pages. That there should be no separate title-page to the first part is not strange, as it scarcely seemed to want one: but it is rather curious that there should be none to the third part; and that there never was any printed, and that it is not missing from the present eopies, is clear, since the first leaf is numbered fol. i, which would not otherwise have been the case. The type, as before mentioned, is an angular Swiss or German. The title-page and its reverse are in the same letter as the body of the text. But the dedication, the prologue, the names of "the bokes of the whole Byble," and the contents of Genesis, are in a different character, and were most probably printed after the arrival of the volume in England. There are a few marginal references, which are in Roman letters. On fol. xli. of part I. is a large wood-cut of the Tabernacle and its contents; this is repeated on the reverse of fol. lvi. The initial letter of Genesis is a large flourished text eapital. A full page contains fifty-seven lines.

Whether this edition ever had a table of the Epistles and Gospels for the Sundays, 太c. at the end, is not known. No copy has yet been found, that we are aware of, containing any such table; but it seems not improbable that it had, sinee we find one in the reprints in quarto and in folio, by Nicholson, in 1537 ; and also in the edition of 1550 .

It is not known how many copies of this edition

were issued from the press, but the number must have been very great, when we consider that it was the first edition of the whole Bible in English ever offered to the publie, at a time, when, exeited by the writings daily put forth by the reformers, they were most eager to peruse it ; and that Grafton, when he published Matthew's Bible in 1537, although of a much larger size, and consequently more expensive, ventured to print as many as 1500 copies.

This Bible was reprinted in folio and in quarto in 1537, by Nicholson, in Southwark, with a very few slight and trifling alterations. It was printed again in 1550 , after whieh, what remained of the edition was issued in 1553, with a reprinted title-page and preliminary pieces. The edition of 1535 had a new titlepage in 1536, of whieh, as before stated, a facsimile is prefixed to this edition.

FNTO THE MOST VICTORIOUS PRYNCE AND OURE MOST GRACYOUS SOUERAIGNE LORDE,

KYNGE HENRY THE EYGHT,

KYNGE OF ENGLONDE AND OF FRAUNCE, LORDE OF IRLONDE. © $c$. DEFENDOUR OF THE FAYTH, AND VNDER GOD THE CHEFE AND SUPPREME HEADE OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLONDE.

TI The ryght a iust administracyon of the lawes that God gaue vnto Moses and vnto Iosua: the testimonye of faythfulnes that God gaue of Dauid: the plenteous abundaunce of wysdome that God gaue vnto Salomon: the lucky and prosperous age with the multiplicacyon of sede whiche God gaue vnto Abraham and Sara his wyfe, be geuē vnto you most gracyous Prynce, with your dearest iust wyfe, and most vertuous Pryncesse, Quene Anne, Amen.

CAIPHAS beynge bysshope of that yeare, lyke a blynde prophete (not viderstandyng what he sayd) prophecied, ${ }^{a}$ that it was better to put Christ vnto death, then that all the people shulde perysshe: he meanyng, that Christ was an heretike, a deceauer of the people, $\mathbb{t}$ a destroyer of the lawe, and that it was better therfore to put Christ vnto death, thā to suffe hym for to lyue, and to dcceaue the people. atc. where in very dede Christ was the true prophete, the true Messias, and the onely true Sauiour of the worlde, sent of his heauenly father to suffre the moste cruell, most shamefull, and most necessary death for our redempcyon: accordyng to $y^{\text {e }}$ meanynge of the prophecie truely vnderstonde.

Euen after the same maner $y^{*}$ blynde bysshoppe of Rome, (that blynde Baalam I saye) not vnderstondynge what he dyd, gaue vnto your grace this tytle: Defendour of the fayth, onely bycause your hyghnes suffred your bysshoppes to burne Gods worde the rote of fayth, and to persecute the louers and mynisters of $y^{e}$ same. where in very dede the blynde bysshoppe (though he knewe not what he dyd) prophecied, that by the ryghteous admynistracyon and contynuall diligence of youre grace, the fayth shulde so be defended, that Gods worde the mother of Fayth with the frutes therof, shulde haue his fre course thorowe out all Christendome, but specyally in your realme.

Yf your hyghnesse now of your pryncely benignite wyll pardon me to compare these two bysshoppes (I meane bysshoppe Caiphas and the bysshoppe of Rome) (t theyr prophecies together, I doute not but we shal fynde them agree lyke brethren, though the one be a Iewe and the other a counterfayte Christian. Fyrst, Caiphas prophecied that it was better to put Christ vnto death, then that the people shulde perysshe. The bysshoppe of Rome also, not knowynge what he prophecied, gaue youre grace this tytle: Defendour of the fayth. The trueth of both these prophecies is of the holy goost (as was Baalams prophecie) though they that spake thē, knewe not what they sayd. The trueth of Caiphas prophecie is, that it was necessary for mans saluacyon, that Christ by his death shulde ouercome death, and redeme vs. And the trueth of oure Baalams prophecie is, ${ }^{b} y^{t}$ your grace in very dede shulde defende the Fayth, Yee euen the true fayth of Christ, no dreames, no fables, no heresie, no papisticall inuencions, but the vncorrupte fayth of Gods most holy worde, which to set forth (praysed be the goodnes of God, and increace youre gracyous purpose) your hyghnes with youre most honorable councell, applyeth all his studye and endeuoure.

These two blynde bysshopes now agree in $\mathrm{y}^{\circ}$ vnderstädyng of theyr prophecies: for Caiphas taketh Christ for an heretike, Oure Balaā taketh the worde [^18]of Christ for heresie. Caiphas iudgeth it to be a good dede to put Christ vito death, that he shulde not deceave the people. Oure Balaam calleth defendynge of the fayth, the suppressyng, kepyng secrete, and burnyng of the worde of fayth : lest the lyght thereof shulde stter his darknes: lest his owne Decretales a Decrees, his owne lawes and constitucions, his owne statutes and inuencions shulde come to none effecte: lest his intollerable exactions and vsurpacions shulde lose theyr strengthe : lest it shulde be knowen what a thefe and murthemer he is in the cause of Christ, and how haynons a traytoure to God and man in defraudynge all Christen kynges © prynces of theyr due obedience: lest we youre graces subiectes shulde hane eyes in the worde of God, at the last to spye out his crafty conueyaūce and iuglynges: and lest men shulde se, how sore he and his false Apostles have deceaued all Christendone, specyally youre noble realme of Englonde.

Thus your grace seyth how brotherly the Iewysh bysshoppe and oure Balaam agree together, not onely in myter and outwarde appearaunce: but as the one persecuted the Lorde Iesus in his owne persone, so doth the other persecute his worde and resysteth his holy ordynames in the auctorite of his anoynted kynges. For so moche nowe as the worde of God is the onely trueth that dryueth awaye all lyes, and discloseth all iuglyng and disceate, therfore is oure Ba laam of Rome so lothe that the scripture shulde be knowe in the mother tonge: lest yf kynges and prynces (specially aboue all other) were exercysed therin, they shulde reclame and chalenge agayne theyr due auctorite, which he falsely hath vsurped so many yeres, and so to tye hym shorter: and lest the people beyng taught by the worde of God, shulde fall from $y^{e}$ false fayned obediēce of hym and his disguysed Apostles, vnto the true obedience commaunded by Gods owne mouthe: as namely, to obey theyr prynce, to obey father and mother. © c . and not to steppe ouer father and mothers bely to enter in to his paynted religions, as his ypocrites teache: For he knoweth well ynough, that yf the cleare Sonne of Gods worde come ones to the heate of the daye, it shal dryue awaye all the foule myst of his deuelysh doctrines. Therfore [^19]were it more to the mayntenaunce of Antichristes kyngdome, that the worlde were styll in ignoraunce and blyndnes, and that the scripture shulde neuer come to lyghte. For the scripture (both in the olde testament and in the new) declareth most aboūtdauntly that the office, auctorite and power geuen of God mnto kynges, is in earth aboue all other powers: let them call the selues Popes, Cardynalles, or what so euer they will, ${ }^{a}$ the worde of god declareth them (yee and commaundeth them vnder payne of dampnacion) to be obedient vnto the temporall swerde: As in the olde Testament all the Prophetes, Prestes and Lenites were. And in the new Testament ${ }^{b}$ Christ a his Apostles both were obedient them selues, and taught obedience of all men vnto theyr prynces àd temporall rulers: which here unto rs in the worlde present the persone of God, and are called 'Goddes in the scripture, bycanse of the excellécy of theyr office. And though there were no mo auctorities but the same, to prone the peminence of the temporall swerde, Yet by this the scripture declareth playnly, that as there is nothyng aboue God, so is there no man aboue the kynge in his realme but that he onely moder God is the chefe heade of all the cogregacyon and church of the same. And in token that this is true, there hath ben of olde antiquite (and is yet vnto this daye) a louynge ceremonye rsed in your realne of Englonde, $y^{t}$ whā your graces subiectes reade your letters, or begynne to talke or come of your hyghnes, they mone theyr bonettes for a signe a token of reuerence vnto your grace, as to their most soueraigne lorde a heade vnder God. which thyng no man vseth to do to eny bysshoppe. wherby (yf oure rnderstondyng were nat blynded) we myght euydently perceaue, that euen very nature teacheth rs the same, that scripture comaüdeth rs: and that lyke as it is agaynst Gods worde that a kynge shulde not be the chefe heade of his people, euen so (I saye) is it agaynst kynde that we shulde knowe any other heade aboue hym rnder God.

And that no prest nor bysshoppe is exempte (nor can be lawfully) from the obedience of his prynce, the scripture is full both of strayte comaundemétes, a practises of the holyest men. *Aaron was obedient mnto Moses, and called hym his lorde, though he was his owne brother. ${ }^{a}$ Eleasar and Phineas were vnder the obediēce of losua, *Nathan the prophete fell downe to the grounde before kynge Dauid, he had his Prynce in such reuerence ( He made not the kynge for to kysse his fote as the bysshoppe of Rome maketh Emperours to do) Notwithstondynge he spared not to rebuke hym, and that ryght sharply whan he fell from the worde of God to adultery a manslaughter. For he was not afrayed to reproue hym of his sinnes, nomore than Helyas the prophete stode in feare to saye vnto kynge Achab: $\dagger \mathrm{It}$ is thou and thy fathers house that trouble Israel, because ye hane forsaken $y^{e}$ commaundementes of the Lorde, and walke after Baal. And as Johan Baptyste durst saye vnto Kynge Herode: ${ }^{b}$ It is not lawful for the to take thy brothers wyfe. But to my purpose I passe oner innumerable mo ensāples both of the olde Testament and of the new, for feare lest I be to tedyous vuto your grace. 'Sūma, in all godly regimentes of olde tyme the kynge and teporall indge was obeyed of euery man, and was alwaye vuder God the chefe and suppreme heade of the whole congregacyon, ${ }^{c}$ and deposed euen prestes whan he sawe an vrgent cause, as Salomon dyd vnto Abiathar. who coulde than stonde agaynst the godly obedience of his prynce (excepte he wolde be at defyaunce with God and all his holy ordinaunces) that were well acquaynted with the holy scripture, which so earnestly comendeth vinto euery one of vs the auctorite and power geuen of God mnto kynges and temporall rulers? Therfore doth Moses so strately ${ }^{d}$ forbyde the Israelites to speake so moche as an euell worde agaynst the prynce of $y^{6}$ people, moche lesse than to disobeye hym, or to withstonde hym. Doth not ${ }^{6}$ Ieremy the prophete and $f$ Baruc also exhorte the people in captiuite, to praye for the prosperons welfare of the kynge of Babilon, and to obeye hym, though he was an infidele? In the new Testament whā oure sauioure Christ (beyng yet fre © Lorde of al kynges a prynces) shewed his obedience in payenge the trybute to oure ensample, $\ddagger$ dyd he not a miracle there in puttynge the pece of money in the fysshes mouth (that Peter myght paye the customer therwith) and all to stablyssbe the obedience due vito

[^21]prynces? § Dyd not Ioseph and Mary the mother of our sauiour Christ departe frō Nazareth nnto Bethleē, so farre from home, to showe theyr obedience in payenge the taxe to the pryace? And wolde not oure Sauioure be borne in the same obedience? \|Doth not Paule pronounce hym to resyste God hym selfe, that resysteth the auctorite of his prynce? And (to be shorte) the Apostle Peter ${ }^{5}$ dothe not onely stablysshe the obedience vnto prynces and temporall rulers but affinneth playnly the kynge (and no bysshoppe) to be the chefe heade. Innumerable places mo are there in scripture, which bynde vs to the obedience of oure prynce, and declare vnto vs, that no man is nor can be lawfully excepte from the same: but that all the mynisters of Goddes worde are vnder the téporall swerde: a Prynces onely to owe obedience vnto God a his worde.

And where as Anthichrist vnto youre graces tyme dyd thrust his heade into $y^{e}$ imperiall crowne of your hyghnes (as he doth yet with other noble prynces mo) that lerned he of Sathā the authour of pryde, and therin doth he both agaynst the doctryne a also agaynst $y^{e}$ ensample of Christe: whiche because his kyngdome was not of this worlde, medled with no temporall matters, as it is euydent both by his wordes and practyse: Luc. sii. Math. xxvi. Ioh. vi. Ioh. xviii, where he $y^{t}$ hath eyes to se, maye se: d he $y^{t}$ hath eares to heare, maye heare, $y^{t}$ Christes admynistracion was nothyng teporall, but playne spiritual, as he hym selfe affirmeth $\mathbb{C}$ proneth in the fourth chapter of saynt Luke out of the prophete Esay: where all bysshoppes and prestes maye se, how farre theyr byndynge and lowsynge extendeth, and where in theyr office consisteth, namely in preachynge the Gospell. ©c.

done by that Antychrist of Rome vnto youre graces most noble predecessoure kynge Iohn? I passe ouer his pestilent pykynge of Peter pens out of youre realme : his stealynge awaye of youre money for pardons: benefices and bysshoprykes: his disceauyng of youre subiectes soules with his deuelyshe doctrynes and sectes of his false religions: his blondsheddyng of so many of your graces people, for bokes of the scripture. whose herte wolde not be greued (yee and that out of measure) to call to remēbraūce, how obstinate and disobedient, how presumptuous a stubburne that Antychrist made the bysshoppes of youre realme agaynst your graces noble predecessours in tymes past, as it is manyfest in $y^{e}$ Cronicles? I trust verely there be no suche now within youre realme: Yf there be, let them remembre these wordes of scripture: " Presumptuousnes goeth before destruccio, © after a proude stomacke there foloweth a fall.
what is now the cause of all these vntollerable and nomore to be suffred abhominacions? Truely euen the ignoraunce of the scripture of God. For how had it els ben possyble, that such blyndnes shulde haue come in to $y^{e}$ worlde, had not $y^{e}$ lyghte of Gods worde bene extyncte? How coulde men (I saye) haue bene so farre from the true seruyce of God, and from the due obedience of theyr prynce, had not the lawe of God bene clene shut vp , depressed, cast asyde, and put out of remembraunce ? As it was afore the tyme of that noble kynge Iosias, and as it hath bene also amonge vs vnto youre graces tyme: by whose most ryghteous admynistracyon (thorowe the mercyfull goodues of God) it is now founde agayne, *as it was in the dayes of that most vertuous kynge Iosias. And praysed be the father, the sonne, and the holy goost worlde without ende, which so excellently hath endewed youre Pryncely hert with such feruentnes to his honoure, and to the welth of youre louyng subiectes, that I maye ryghtuously (by iust occasyons in youre persone) copare youre hyghnes vnto that noble and gracyous kynge, $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{t}}$ lanterne of lyghte amonge prynces, that feruent protectour and defender of the lawes of God: which comaunded straytly (as youre grace doth) that the lawe of God shulde be redde and taught vnto all $y^{e}$ people: set the prestes to theyr office in the worde

And what prosperons health both of soule t body foloweth the lyke mynistracion in youre byghnes, we begynne now (praysed be God) to haue experience. ${ }^{\delta}$ For as false doctryne is the origenall cause of all euell plages and destruccyon, so is $y^{e}$ true executynge of the lawe of God $\bar{a} d$ the preachyng of the same, the mother of all godly prosperite. The onely worde of god (I saye) is the cause of all felicite, ${ }^{c}$ it bryngeth all goodnes with it, it bryngeth lernynge, it gēdreth vnderstondynge, it causeth good workes, it maketh chyldren of obedience, breuely, it teacheth all estates theyr office and duety. Seynge then that the scripture of God teacheth is enery thynge sufficiently, both what we oughte to do, and what we oughte to leaue vndone: whome we are bounde to obey, and whome we shulde not obeye: therfore (I saye) it causeth all prosperite, and setteth euery thyng in frame : and where it is taught and knowen, it lyghteneth all darkenesses, cōforteth all sory hertes, leaueth no poore man vnhelped, suffreth nothynge amysse vnamended, letteth no prynce be disobeyed, permytteth no heresie to be preached: but refourmeth all thinges, amēdeth that is amysse, and setteth euery thynge in order. And why? because it is geuen by the inspiracyon of God, therfore is it euer bryngynge profyte and frute, by teachynge, by improuynge, by amendynge and refourmyng all the $y^{t}$ wyl receaue it, "to make them parfecte of mete mito all good workes.

defender and maynteyner of Gods lawes, I thought it my dutye and to belonge vnto my allegiaunce, whan I had translated this Bible, not onely to dedicate this translacyon vnto youre hyghnesse, but wholy to commytte it vnto the same: to the intent that yf any thynge therin be translated amysse (for in many thynges we fayle, euen whan we thynke to be sure) it may stōde in youre graces handes, to correcte it, to amende it, to improue it, yee $\mathbb{a}$ cleane to reiecte it, yf youre godly wysdome shall thynke it necessary. And as I do with all humblenes submitte myne vaderstondynge and my poore translacyon vito $y^{e}$ spirite of trueth in your grace, so make I this protestacyon (hauyng God to recorde in my cōscience) that I haue nether wrested nor altered so moch as one worde for the mayntenaūce of any maner of secte: but haue with a cleare conscience purely a faythfully translated this out of fyue sundry interpreters, hauyng onely the manyfest trueth of the scripture before myne eyes: Trustynge in the goodnes of God, that it shalbe rnto his worshippe: quietnes and tranquilite unto your hyghnes : a perfecte stablyshment of all Gods ordy-

MYLES COUERDALE VNTO THE CHRISTEN READER.

CONSIDERYNGE how excellent knowlege and Jernynge an interpreter of scripture oughte to have in the tongues, and ponderyng also myne owne insufficiency therin, © how weake I am to perfourme $y^{e}$ office of a translatoure, I was the more lothe to medle with this worke. Notwithstondynge whan I cossydered how greate pytie it was that we shulde wante it so longe, a called to my remembraunce $y^{e}$ aduersite of them, which were not onely of rype knowlege, but wolde also with all theyr hertes have perfourmed $y^{t}$ they beganne, yf they had not had impediment : considerynge (I saye) that by reason of theyr aduersyte it coulde not so soone haue bene broughte to an ende, as oure most prosperous naeyon wolde fayme haue had it: these and other reasonable causes consydered, I was the more bolde to take it in hande. And to belpe me herin, I haue had sondrye translacions, not onely in latyn, but also of the Douche interpreters: whom (because of theyr synguler gyftes (t speciall diligence in the Bible) I haue ben the more glad to folowe for the most parte, accordynge as I was requyred. But to saye the trueth before God, it was uether my laboure ner desyre, to haue this worke put in my hande: neuertheles it greued me $y^{t}$ other nacyōs shulde be more plenteously prouyded for with $y^{e}$ seripture in theyr mother tongue, then we: therfore whan I was instantly requyred, though I coulde not do so well as I wolde, I thought it yet my dewtye to do my best, and that with a good wyll.
where as some men thynke now $y^{e}$ many translacyons make diusisyon in $y^{e}$ fayth and in the people of God, $y^{t}$ is not so: for it was never better with the congregacion of god, then whan euery ehurch allmost had $y^{e}$ Byble of a sondrye trāslacion. Amonge the Grekes had not Origen a specyall translacyon? Had not Vulgarius one peculyar, a lykewyse Chrysostom? Besyde the seuentye interpreters, is there not the translacyon of Aquila, of Theodotio, of Symaehus, and of sondrye other? Agayne amonge the Latyn men, thon findest $y^{t}$ euery one allmost $v$ sed a specyall Therfore oughte it not to be taken as euel, $y^{t}$ soch men as haue vnderstondynge now in oure tyme, exercyse them selues in $y^{\text {e }}$ tongues, ๔ geue their diligence to translate out of one language in to another. Yee we ought rather to geue god hye thankes therfore, which thorow his sprete stereth vp mēs myndes, so to exercise them selues therin. wolde god it had neuer bene left of after $y^{e}$ tyme of S . Augnstine, then shulde we neuer haue come in to soch blindnes ignoraūce, in to soch erroures $\mathbb{T}$ delusyons. For as soone as the Byble was cast asyde, $\mathbb{T}$ nomore put in exercyse, then beganne euery one of his awne heade to wryte what so euer came in to his brayne and $y^{t}$ semed to be good in his awne eyes: and so grewe $y^{e}$ darknes of mēs tradicios. And this same is $y^{e}$ cause $y^{t}$ we haue had so many wryters, which seldome made mēcyon of $y^{e}$ scripture of the Byble : © though they some tyme aleged it, yet was it done so farre out of season (a so wyde from $y^{e}$ purpose, that a mā maye well perceaue, how that they neuer sawe the oryginall.

Seynge then $y^{\mathbf{t}}$ this diligent exercyse of translatynge doth so moch good at edifyeth in other langnages, why shulde it do euell in oures? Doutles lyke as all nacyons in $y^{e}$ dyuersite of speaches maye knowe one God in the vnyte of faith, and be one in loue: euen so maye dyuerse translacyons monderstonde one another, © that in the bead articles at grounde of oure most blessed faith, though they rse sondrye wordes, wherfore me thynke we haue greate occasyon to geue thankes snto God, that be hath opened unto his church the gyfte of interpretacyon $\mathbb{5}$ of pryntyng, and that there are now at this tyme so many, which with soch diligece and faithfulnes interprete $y^{e}$ scripture to the honoure of god and edifyenge of his people, where as (lyke as whan many are shutynge together) enery one doth his best to be nyest the marke. And though they can not all attayne therto, yet shuteth one nyer then another, and hytteth it better then another, yee one can do it better the another. who is now then so vnreasonable, so despytefull, or ennyous, as to abhorre him $y^{t}$ doth all his diligence to hytte $y^{\circ}$ prycke, and to shate nyest it, though he mysse a come not nyest the mark? Ought not soch one rather to be commèded, and to be helped forwarde, that he maye exercyse himselfe the more therin?

For the which canse (acordyng as I was desyred) I toke the more vpon me to set forth this speciall translacyon, not as a checker, not as a reprouer, or despyser of other mens translacyons (for amonge many as yet I have founde none without occasyon of greate thankesgeuynge vito god) but lowly a faythfully haue I folowed myne interpreters, of that vnder correccyon. There is noman lyuynge $y^{t}$ can se all thynges, nether hath god geuen eny man to knowe enery thynge. One seyth more clearly then another, one hath more vnderstondyng then another, one can vtter a thynge better then another, but noman ought to enuye, or dispyse another. He that can do better then another, shulde not set him at naught $y^{t}$ voderstondeth lesse: Yee he that hath $y^{e}$ more vinderstondyng, ought to remembre that the same gyfte is not his but Gods, and $y^{t}$ God hath geue it him to teach ts enfourme the ignorannt. Yf thou hast knowlege therfore to indge where eny faute is made, I doute not but thou wilt helpe to amende it, yf loue be ioyned with thy knowlege. Howbeit wherin so ener I can perceane by my selfe, or by the informacyon of other, that I haue fayled (as it is no wonder) I shall now by the helpe of God ouerloke it better © amende it.
Now wil I exhorte the (who so euer thou be $y^{t}$ readest scripture) yf thon fynde onghte therin $y^{t}$ thon voderstondest not, or that apeareth to be repugnaunt, geue no temerarious ner haystye iudgmét therof: but ascrybe it to thyne awne ignoraunce, not to the scrypture, thynke $y^{t}$ thou vnderstondest it not, or $y^{t}$ it bath some other meanynge, or $y^{t}$ it is happlye ouersene of $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{e}}$ interpreters, or wronge prynted. Agayne, it shall greately helpe $y^{e}$ to vnderstonde scripture, yf thou marke not onely what is spoken or wrytten, but of whom, dt vnto whom, with what wordes, at what tyme, where, to what intent, with what circumstaunce, consyderynge what goeth before, and what foloweth after. For there be some thynges which are done © wryttē, to the intente $y^{\text {t }}$ we shulde do lykewyse: as whan Abraham beleueth God, is obedient vnto his worde, © defendeth Loth his kynsman from violent wronge. There be some thynges also which are wryttë, to the intente $y^{t}$ we shulde eschue soch lyke. As whan Dauid lyeth with Vrias wyfe, a causeth him to be slayne. Therfore (I saye) whan thon readest scripture, be wyse d circumspecte: © whan thou commest to soch straunge maners of speakynge © darke sentences, to soch parables đ similitudes, to soch dreames or vysions as are hyd from thy maderstondynge, comytte them vito God or to the gyfte of his holy sprete in them $y^{t}$ are better lemed then thou.

As for the commendacyon of Gods holy scripture, I wolde fayne magnifye it as it is worthy, but I am farre vnsufficiēt therto. ©f therfore I thoughte it better for me to holde my tonge, then with few wordes to prayse or comméde it: exhortynge $y^{e}$ (most deare reader) so to loue it , so to cleue vnto it , (s so to folowe it in thy daylye conuersacyon, $\mathrm{y}^{t}$ other men seynge thy good workes $\mathbb{T}$ the frutes of $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{e}}$ holy goost in the, maye prayse the father of heauen, at geue his worde a good reporte: for to lyue after the lawe of God, © to leade a vertuous conuersacyon, is the greatest prayse $\mathbf{y}^{t}$ thou canst geue vato his doctryne.

But as touchynge the enell reporte and disprayse that the good worde of God hath by the corrupte and euell conuersacyon of some, $y^{t}$ daylye heare it and professe it outwardly with theyr mouthes, I exhorte $y^{e}$ (most deare reader) let not $y^{t}$ offende the ner withdrawe thy mynde fro the lone of $y^{e}$ trueth, nether moue $y^{e}$ to be partaker in lyke vathankfulnes: but seynge $y^{\mathrm{e}}$ lighte is come in to the worlde, loue nomore the workes of darknes, receane not the grace of god in vayne. Call to thy remembrannce how louynge at mercifull God is vnto the, how kyndly and fatherly he helpeth the in all trouble, teacheth thyne ignoraunce, healeth the in all thy sycknesse, forgeueth the all thy symnes, fedeth $y^{e}$, geueth the drynke, helpeth $y^{e}$ out of preson, norysheth the in straunge countrees, careth for the, a seyeth $y^{t}$ thou wante nothynge. Call this to mynde (I saye) d that earnestly, and consydre how thou hast receaued of god all these benefites (yee and many mo then thou canst desyre) how thou art bounde lykewise to shewe thy selfe vnou thy neghbonre as farre as thou canst, to teach hiun yl he be ignoraunt, to helpe him in all his trouble, to beale bis sycknes, to forgeue him his offences, and that hartely, to fede him, to cherish him, to care for him, and to se $y^{t}$ he wante nothyng. And on this behalfe I heseke the (hou $y^{*}$ hast $y^{e}$ ryches of this worlde, and lonest God with thy harte) to lyfte vp thyne eyes, and se how greate a multitude of poore people renne thorow euery towne: baue pitie on thyne awne flesh, helpe them with a good harte, and do with thy councell all that euer thon canst, that this vnshamefast beggynge maye be put downe, that these ydle folkes maye be set to laboure, a that soch as are not able to get theyr lyuynge, maye be prouyded for. At the leest thon $y^{t}$ art of councell with soch as are in auctoryte, geue them some occasyon to cast theyr heades together, and to make prouysyon for the poore. Put the in remembraunce of those noble cityes in other countrees, that by the auctoryte of theyr prynces hane so rychely $\bar{a} d$ well prouided for theyr poore people, to the greate shame a deshonestye of vs, yf we lykewyse receauynge $y^{e}$ worde of God, shewe not soch lyke frutes therof. wolde God $y^{t}$ those men (whose office is to maynteyne $y^{e}$ comon welth) were as diligent in this cause as they are in other. Let vs beware by tymes, for after unthankfulnes there foloweth euer a plage: the mercyful hande of God be with vs, of defende vs that we be not partakers therof.

Go to now (most deare reader) at syt the downe at the Lordes fete and reade his wordes, (t (as Moses teacheth the lewes) take them in to theyr herte, d let thy talkynge a communicacion be of them whan thon syttest in thyue house, or goest by $y^{e}$ waye, whan thou lyest downe, a whan thou ryseth vp. And above all thynges fasshyon thy lyfe, a couersacion acordyng to the doctryne of the boly goost therin, that thou mayest he partaker of $y^{e}$ good promyses of god in the Byble, ot be heyre of his blessynge in Clurist. In whom yf thou put thy trust, d be an vnfayued reader or hearer of bys worde with thy bert, thon shalt fynde swetenesse theryn, a spye woderous thynges, to thy vnderstondynge, to the anoydynge of all seblicyons sectes, to the abborynge of thy olde syufull lyte, a to the stablyshynge of thy godly comuersacyon.

In the first boke of Noses (called Genesis) thon

[^24]mayest leme to knowe the almightye power of god in creatynge all of naught, his infinite wysdome in ordryng the same, his ryghteousnes in punyshynge $y^{\mathrm{e}}$ vngodly, his loue d fatherly mercy in comfortynge the righteous with his promes, ac.

In the seconde boke (called Exodus) we se the myghtye arme of god, in delyuerynge his people from so greate bondage out of Egypte, and what prouysyon be maketh for them in the wildernes, how he teacheth them with his wholsome worde and how the Tabernacle was made and set vp.

In the thyrde boke (called Leuiticus) is declared what sacrifices the prestes (t) Leuites vsed, and what theyr office a ministracyon was.

In the fourth boke (called Numerus) is declared how the people are nombred and mustred, how the captaynes are chosen after $y^{\text {e }}$ trybes a kynreds, how they wete forth to $y^{e}$ battayll, how they pitched theyr tentes, a how they brake vp.

The fyfth boke (called Deuteronomium) sheweth how that Moses now beynge olde, rehearseth the lawe of god vnto $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{e}}$ people, putteth them in remembraunce agayne of all the wonders a benefites that god had shewed for them, and exhorteth them earnestly to lone $y^{e}$ Lorde theyr god, to clene vnto him, to put their trust in him and to herken vnto his voyce.

After the death of Moses doth Iosue brynge the people in to the lode of promes where God doth wonderous thynges for his people by losue, which distributeth $y^{e}$ londe vato them, vnto euery trybe theyr possession. But in theyr wealth they forgat the goodnes of God, so that oft tymes he gane the oner in to the hande of theyr enemies. Neuertheles whan so ener they called faithfully vpon him, and conuerted, he delyuered them agayne, as the boke of Iudges declareth.

In the bokes of the kynges, is descrybed the regiment of good and euell prynces, and how the decaye of all nacions commeth by euel kynges. For in Ieroboam thou seyst what myschefe, what ydolatrye (t) soch like abhominacyon foloweth, whä the kynge is a mayntfyner of false doctryne, ad causeth the people to syme agaynst God, which fallinge awaye from gods worde. increased so sore amonge them, that it was the cause of all theyr sorowe and misery, a the very uccasion why Israel first and then Inda, were caryed awaye in to captyuite. ${ }^{\text {B }}$ Agayne, in Iosit phat, in Ezechias and in Iosias thou seyst the nature of a vertuous kynge. He putteth downe the honses of ydolatrye, seyth that his prestes teach nothynge but $y^{e}$ lawe of God, commaundeth his lordes to go with them, and to se that they teach the people. In these kynges (I saye) thou seyst the cōdicyon of a true defender of $\mathrm{y}^{0}$ fayth, for he spareth nether cost ner laboure, to manteyne the lawes of God, to seke the welth © prosperite of his people, and to rote out the wicked. And where soch a prince is, thou seyst agayne, how God defendeth him and his people, thongh he have neuer so many enemyes. Thus wente it with the in the olde tyme, and euen after $y^{e}$ same maner goeth it now with vs: God be praysed therfore, àd graunte vs of his fatherly mercy, that we be not vnthankfill: lest where he now geueth vs a Iosaphat, an Ezechias, yee a very Iosias, he sende vs a Pharao, a Ieroboam, or an Achab.
${ }^{5} 2$ Par. 17. b.

Eo the Jifader.

In the two first bokes of Esdras th in Hester thon seyst the delyueraunce of the people, which though they were but fewe, yet is it vnto vs all a speciall coforte, for so moch as God is not forgetfull of his promes, but bryngeth them out of captiuite, acordynge as he had tolde them before.

In the boke of Iob we lerne comforte and pacience, in that God not onely punysheth the wicked, but proneth $\mathbb{T}$ tryeth the iust and righteons (howbeit there is noman imocent in his sighte) by dyuerse troubles in this lyfe, declaryng therby, $y^{t}$ they are not his bastardes, but his deare sonnes, and that he loneth them.

In the Psalmes we lerne how to resorte onely vnto God in all oure tronbles, to seke helpe at him, to call onely vpon him, to satle oure myndes by paciēce, © how we ought in prosperite to be thankfull vnto him.

The Pronerbes and the Preacher of Salomon teach vs wysdome, to knowe God, oure owne selnes, and the worlde, and how vayne all thynges are, saue onely to cleue vnto God.

As for the doctryne of the Prophetes, what is it els, but an earnest exhortacion to eschue synne, a to turnc vnto God? a faythfull promes of the mercy ad pardon of God, vnto all them $y^{t}$ turne vato him, and a threatenyng of his wrath to the vagodly? sauynge that here and there they prophecye also manifestly of Clirist, of $y^{\circ}$ expalsion of the Iewes, and callynge of the Heythen.

Thus moch thought I to speake of $y^{e}$ olde Testament, wherin almyghtie God openeth vito vs his myghtye power, his wysdome, his lonynge mercy a righteonsnesse; for the which cause it oughte of no man to be abhorred, despysed, or lyghtly regarded, as though it were an olde scripture $y^{t}$ nothyng beloged vnto vs, or $y^{t}$ now were to be refused. For it is Gods true scriptare a testimony, which the Lorde Iesus ${ }^{a}$ commaundeth the Iewes to search. who so euer beleneth not the scripture, beleneth not Christ, and who so refnseth it, refuseth God also.
The New Testament or Gospell, is a manyfest and cleare testymony of Christ how God perfourmeth his ooth and promes made in the olde Testament, how the New is declared and included in the Olde, and the Olde fulfylled and verifyed in the New.

Now where as the most famous interpreters of all gene sondrye iudgmentes of the texte (so farre as it is done by $y^{e}$ sprete of knowlege in the holy goost) me thynke noman shulde be offended there at, for they referre theyr doinges in mekenes to the sprete of trueth in the congregacyon of god : © sure I am, that there commeth more knowlege and vnderstondinge of the scripture by theyr sondrie translacyons, then by all the gloses of oure sophisticall doctonrs. For that one interpreteth somthynge obscurely in one place, the same translateth another (or els he him selfe) more manifestly by a more playne vocable of the same meanyng in another place. Be not thon offended therfore (good Reader) though one call a scrybe, that another calleth a lawyer: or elders, that another calleth father $\mathbb{C}$ mother: or repentannce, that another calleth pennaunce or amendment. For yf thou be not disceaued by mens tradicios, thou shalt fynde nomore dyuersite betwene these termes then betwene foure pens and a grote. And this maner hane I ised in my translacyon, callyng it in some place pennannce, that in another place I call reprentannce, and that not onely because the interpreters have done so before me, but that the aduersaries of the trueth maye se, how that we abhorre not this worde penaunce (as they vitruly reporte of vs) no more then the interpreters of latyn abhorre penitere, whan they reade resipiscere. Onely our hertes desyre mito God, is, that his preple be not blyaded in theyr volerstondyng, lest they beleue pemnaunce to be onght satue a very repētannce, amédment, or connersyon vuto God, and to be an mayned new ereature in Christ, and to lyue acordyng to his lawe. For els shall they fal in to the olde blasphemy of Christes bloude, and beleue, that they the selues are able to make satisfaccion vnto God for theyr awne synnes, from the which erroure god of his mercy and pléteous goodnes preserue all his.

Now to conclude: for so moch as all the scripture is wrytten for thy doctryne a ensample, it shalbe necessary for the, to take holde vpon it, whyle it is offred the, yee and with ten handes thankfully to receaue it . And though it be not worthely ministred vato the in this translacyon (by reason of my rudnes) Yet yf thou be feruēt in thy prayer, God shal not onely sende it the in a better shappe, by the mynistracyon of other that beganne it afore, but shall also moue the hertes of them, which as yet medled not withall, to take it in hande, and to bestowe the gifte of theyr miderstondynge theron, as well in oure language as other famous interpreters do in other languages. And I praye God, that thorow my poore ministracyon here in, I maye geue them that can do better, some occasyon so to do: exhortyng the (most deare reader) in the meane whyle on Gods behalfe, yf thou be a heade, a Iudge, or ruler of $y^{e}$ people, that thou ${ }^{a}$ let not the boke of this lawe departe out of thy mouth, but exercise thyselfe therin both daye and nyghte, and be euer readyng in it as longe as thou lyuest : that thou mayest lerne to feare the Lorde thy God, T not to turne asyde from the commaundement, nether to the right hande ner to the lefte: lest thou be a knower of personnes in iudgmét, ${ }^{b}$ and wrest the righte of the straunger, of the fatherles or of the wedowe, and so $y^{6}$ curse to come vpon the. But what office so euer thou hast ${ }^{\text {c }}$ wayte rpon it, and execute it, to the mayntenaunce of peace, to the welth of thy people, defendynge the lawes of God, and the louers therof, and to the destruccyon of the wicked.
${ }^{d}$ Yf thou be a preacher, and hast the ouersighte of the flocke of Christ, awake and fede Christes shepe with a good herte, a spare no laboure to do them good, seke not thy selfe, a bewarre of fylthy lucre, but ${ }^{\text {c }}$ be vnto $y^{e}$ flocke an ensample, in $y^{c}$ worde, in couersacyon, in loue, in feruentnes of $y^{*}$ sprete, and be euer readynge, exhortynge, (t teachynge in Gods worde, that the people of God remne not vnto other doctrynes and lest thou thy selfe (whan thou shuldest teach other) be founde ignoraunt therin. And rather

[^25]then thou woldest teach the people eny other thynge then Gods worde take the boke in thyne hande, at reade the wordes eue as they stonde therin (for it is no shame so to do, it is more shame to make a lye) This I saye for soch, as are not yet experte in the scripture, for I reproue no preachyng without the boke as longe as they saye the trueth.

Yf thou be a man that hast wyfe and childrē, first $f$ loue thy wyfe, acordynge to the ensample of the loue, wherwith Christ loued the cogregacion, and remembre that so doynge, thou louest euen thyselfe : yf thou hate her, thou hatest thine awne flesh: yf thou cherishe her and make moch of her, thou cherisest a makest moch of thyselfe, for she is bone of thy bones, d flesh of thy flesh. And who so euer thou be that hast children, ${ }^{6}$ bryng them vp in the uurtour and iniormacion of the Lorde. And yf thou be ignoraunt, or art otherwyse occupied laufully that thou canst not teach them thy selfe, then be euen as diligent to seke a good master for thy childrē, as thou wast to seke a mother to beare them: for there lieth as great weight in the one as in $y^{e}$ other. Yee better it were for the to be mborne, then not to feare God, or to be euel brought rp. which thynge (I meane bryngynge tp well of children) yf it be diligently loked to, it is the vpholdinge of all comon welthes: and the negligence of the same, the very decaye of all realmes.
Fynally, who so euer thou be, take these wordes of scripture in to thy herte, and be not onely an outwarde hearer, but a doeer therafter, and practyse thyselfe therin: that thou mayest fele in thine hert, the swete promyses therof for thy consolacion in all trouble, © for the sure stablyshinge of thy hope in Christ, and have euer an eye to $y^{e}$ wordes of scripture, that yf thou be a teacher of other thou mayest be within the boundes of the trueth, or at the leest though thou be but an hearer or reader of another mans doynges, thou mayest yet haue knowlege to iudge all spretes, and be fre from euery erroure, to the vtter destruccion of all sedicious sectes a straunge doctrynes, that the holy scrypture maye haue fre passage, and be had in reputacion, to the worshippe of the author therof, which is euen God himselfe: to whom for his most blessed worde be glory $\mathfrak{a}$ domynion now a euer. Amen.

IN $\dot{y}$ begynnynge God ereated heauen a earth: and $\dot{y}$ earth was voyde and emptie, and darcknes was tpon the depe, a y sprete of God moued ypo the water.

And God sayde: let there be light, a there was light. And God sawe the light that it was good. Then God deuyded y light from the dareknes, and called the light, Daye: and the darcknes, Night. Then of the euenynge and mornynge was made the first daye.

And God sayde: let there be a firmament betwene the waters, and let it deuyde $\frac{f}{y}$ waters a sunder. Then God made $\check{y}$ firmamet, and parted the waters moner the firmamet, from the waters aboue the firmament: And so it came to passe. And God called $y$ firmament, Heauen. Then of the enenynge © mornynge was made the seconde daye.
${ }^{a}$ And God sayde: let the waters moder heanen gather the selues unto one place, ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ the drye londe maye appeare. And so it came to passe. And God sawe that it was good. Then of the euenynge t mornynge was made the thirde daye.

And Gorl sayde : let there be lightes in $\hat{y}$ firmament of heauen, to deuyde the daye frō the night, that they maye be vnto tokes, seasons, dayes, and yeares. And let them be lightes in $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ firmament of heauen, to shyne vpon the earth: And so it came to passe. And God made two greate lightes: one greater light to rule the daye, and a lesse light to rule the night, and (he made) starres also. And God set them in the firmament of heauen, $\dot{y}_{y}$ they might shyne vpō earth, and to rule the daye and the night, and to deuyde the light from dareknes. And God sawe that it was good. Then of the euenynge and mornynge was made the fourth daye.
${ }^{b}$ And God sayde: let the waters brynge forth ereatures that moue and haue life, a foules for to flye aboue the earth onder the firmanēt of heauen. And God ereated greate whalles, and all maner of creatures that lyue and moue, which the waters brought forth euery one after his kynde: and all maner of fethered foules, euery one after his kynde. And God sawe that it was good, and blessed them, sayenge: Growe, and multiplie, and fyll the waters of the sees, and let the foules multiplie spon the earth. ${ }^{8}$ T'HUS was heaue and earth lynished with all their hoost, and thus in the seuenth daye Gorl ended his worke, which he had made, ${ }^{\varepsilon}$ arested in the seuenth daye from all his workes which he had made: And blessed the seuenth daye, a sanctified it, because ${ }^{\mathrm{t}}$ in it he rested from all his workes, which God created and made.

These are the generacions of heaue and earth whan they were created, in the tyme whan the LORDE God made heanen and earth: before there was eny twygg yon earth, and or euer there grew eny grene herbe vpon the felde. For the LORDE God had yet sent no rayne vpon y earth, nether was there eny man to tylle the earth. But there arose a myst from the earth, a watered 3 all the londe. And y LORDE God shope man eue of the moulde of the earth, $\pi$ brethed in to his face $\dot{y}$ breth of life. ${ }^{f}$ And so was man made a lyuynge soule.

The LORDE God also planted a gardé of pleasure in Eden, towarde $\mathfrak{y}$ east, and set man therin whom he had made. And the LORDE God caused to sprynge out of the earth all maner trees, pleasant to loke rpō, and good to eate: and the tre of life in the myddest of the garden, ${ }^{\text {g }}$ and the tre of knowlege of good and euell.

And out of Eden there wente a ryuer, to water the garden, and there deuyded it selfe in to foure heade waters. The first is called Phison, which renneth aboute all the londe of Henyla. ${ }^{4}$ And there is fomme golde, ( $x$ the golde of that countre is precious, ) and there is founde Bedellion, and the precious stome * Onix. The second water is called Gihon, which rumeth aboute the whole londe of $\dot{y}$ Moriās. The thirde water is called Hydeckell, which runneth towarde the east syde of y Assirias. The fourth water is Euphrates.

And the LORDE God toke man, $\tau$ set him in the pleasaunt garden of Eden, to dresse it a to kepe it. And the LORDE God commaunded man, sayëge: ${ }^{i}$ Thou shalt eate of all maner trees in $\dot{y}$ garden: But of $\hat{y}$ tre of knowlege of good and euell, shalt thou not eate. For loke in what daye so euer thon eatest therof, thom shalt dye the death.

And the LORDE God sayde: It is not good ${ }^{\text {t }}$ mā shulde be alone. I wil make him an helpe, to beare him eopany. And whan God the LORDE had made of the earth all maner beastes of the felde, $\pi$ all maner foules vnder the heauē, he bronght them wnto man, to se what he wolde call the: For as mā called all maner of liuinge soules, so are their names. And man gane names vito all maner catell, $a$ unto the foules vinder the hean $\bar{c}$, and vnto all maner beastes of $\hat{y}$ felde. But wnto man there was founde no helpe, to beare him company.

Then the LORDE God caused an herde slepe to fall vpon man, and he slepte. And he toke out one of his rybbes, and (in steade therof) he fylled vp y place with flesh. And the LORDE God made a woman, ${ }^{,}$of y rybbe that he toke out of man, and brought her vnto him. Then sayde man: This is once bone of my bones, and tlesh of my flesh. She shalbe called woman, beeause she was take of man. 'For this cause shal a man leave father and mother, and cleue moto his wife, $\pi$

BUT the serpent was sotyller then all the beastes of the felde ${ }^{a}$ (which $\hat{y}$ LORDE God had made) and sayde vnto ${ }^{\text {b }}$ the woman: Yee, hath God saycle in dede: Ye shall not eate of all maner trees in the garden? Then sayde the woman vnto the serpent: We eate of the frute of the trees in the garden: But as for the frute of the tre that is in the myddes of the garden, God hath sayde: Eate not ye of it, and touch it not, lest ye dye.

Then saide the serpent vnto the woman: * Tush, ye shall not dye the death. For God doth knowe, that in what daye so ener ye eate of it, youre eyes shalbe opened, and ye shal be as God, and knowe both good and euell. And the woman sawe that $\hat{y}$ tre was good to eate of, and lustye vnto the eyes, and a pleasaunt tre + to make wyse, and toke of the frute of it, and ate, and gaue vnto hir husbande also therof, and he ate. Then were the eyes of them both opened, and they perceaued that they were naked, ${ }^{c}$ and sowed fygge leanes together, and made them apurns.

And they herde the voyce of the LORDE God, which walked in the garden in the coole of the daye. And Adam hyd him self with his wyfe, from the presence of ${ }^{f}$ LORDE God amonge the trees of the garden. And $\dot{y}$ LORDE God called Adam, and sayde vito him: Where art thou? And he saide: I herde thy voyce in the garden, and was afrayed, because I am naked, and therfore I hyd my self. And he sayde: who tolde the, that thou art naked? Hast thou not eaten of the tre, wherof I commaunded the, $\dot{y}^{\frac{t}{2}}$ thou shuldest not eate?

Then sayde Adam: The woman which thou ganest me (to beare me company) gaue me of the tre, and I ate. And the LORDE Gorl sayde vnto the woman: wherfore hast thou done this? The woman sayde: the serpent disceaued me so, that I ate. ${ }^{d}$ Then sayde the LORDE God vnto the serpent: Because thou hast done this, cursed be thon abone all catell and abone all beastes of the [^27]felde. Vpon thy bely shalt thou go, a earth shalt thou eate all the dayes of thy life. And I wyll put enemyte betwene the and the woman, and betwene thy sede ${ }^{e}$ and hir sede. $\ddagger$ The same shal treade downe thy heade, and thou shalt treade him on the hele.

And vnto the woman he sayde: I will increase thy sorow, whan thou art with childe : with payne shalt thou beare thy childre, and s thy lust shal pertayne vinto thy huszbande, and he shal rule the.

And vnto Adam he sayde: For so moch as thou hast herkened vato the royce of thy wyfe, and hast eaten of the tre, wherof I commaunded the, sayenge: thou shalt not eate of it. Cursed be $\dot{8}$ earth for thy sake. With sorowe shalt thou eate therof, all the dayes of thy life. Thornes and thistles shalt it beare vnto the, and thou shalt eate the herbes of the felde. In the sweate of thy face shalt thou cate thy bred, tyll thou be turned agayne vnto earth, whèce thou art take : $f$ for earth thou art, and vnto earth shalt thou be turned agayne.

And Adam called his wyfe Heua, because she is the mother of all lyuynge. And the LORDE God made Adam a his wyfe garmentes of skynnes, a those he pui on them. And the LORDE God sayde: lo, Adam is become as it were one of vs, a knoweth good a euell. But now lest he stretch his hande, and take also of the tre of life, and eate, and lyue for ener. Then the LORDE God put him ont of the garden of Eden, to tyll $\dot{y}$ earth, whēce he was takē. And he cast Adam out. And before the garden of Eden he set Cherubes, and a naked fyrie swerde, to kepe $\dot{y}$ waye vnto the tre of life.

And Cain laye with his wyfe, which conceaued and bare Henoch. And he buylded a cite, and called it after the name of his sonne Henoch. And Henoch begat Irad, Irad begat Mahuiael. Mahuiael begat Mathusael. Mathusael begat Lamech.

And Lamech toke him two wyues: ${ }^{\circ}$ one was called Ada, © the other Zilla. And Ada bare Iabel, of whom came they that dwelt in tentes and had catell. And his brothers name [^28]was Iuball: Of him came they that occupied harpes a pypes. And Zilla she also bare Tubalcain, a worker in all connynge poyntes of metall $\mathbb{C}$ yron. And Tubalcains sister was called Naema.

And Lamech sayde vnto his wyues Ada and Zilla: Heare my voyce (ye wyues of Lamech) and herken voto my wordes: for I haue slayne a man, and wounded my selfe: and (haue kylled) a yonge man, and gotte my self strypes. Cain shalbe auēged sené tymes: but Lamech seuen and seuentie tymes.

And Noe dyd all that the LORDE commaunded him. Sixe hūdreth yeare olde was he, whan the water floude came rpon carth. 'And he wente in to the Areke, with his sonnes, his wyfe, and his somnes wyues, for the waters of the floude. Of cleane beastes and of vneleane, of all fethered foules, a of all that erepeth vpon earth, wente in vato him to the Areke by pares, a male and a female, as $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE cómaunded him. And whan the seuen dayes were past, the water floude came vpon the earth.

In the sixe hundreth yeare of Noes age, vpon the seuentene daye of the seconde moneth, that same daye were all $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ foumtaynes of the greate depe broken vp, and the wyndowes of heauen were opened, and there came a rayne vpon ẙ earth fourtie dayes and fourtie nightes.

Vpon the selfe same daye wēte Noe in to the Areke, with Sem, Ham and laphet his somnes, and with his wyfe, and the thre wyues of his sonnes, and all maner of beastes after their kynde, all maner of catell after their kynde, all maner of crepynge thinges (that crepe rpo the earth) after their kynde, and all maner of foules (what so euer coude flye of what so euer had fethers) after their kynde: These wente all vnto Noe in to the Arcke by cooples, of all flesh in whom was the breth of [^31]life. And these were the male a the female of all maner of tlesh, and wente in, acordinge as God commanded him. And the LORDE shut (the dore) ypon him.

${ }^{d}$ 'Then came the water floude fourtie dayes rpon the earth, and the water increased, and bare ip the Areke, and lift it vp ouer ${ }_{y}$ earth. Thus the water preuayled, and inereased sore rpon the earth, so that the Areke wente rpon the waters. Yee the waters prenayled and increased so sore vpon earth, that all the hye mountaynes vnder the whole heanen were couered. Fyftene cubytes hye preuayled $\mathfrak{y}$ waters ouer the mountaynes, which were couered.

Then all flesh that crepte vpon earth, perished, both foules, catell, beastes, and all y mourd vpon earth, and all men. What so euer had the breth of life vpon the drye londe, dyed.
"Thus was destroyed all that was vpon the earth, both man and beast, both wormes and foules vuder $\dot{y}$ heaue: all these were destroyed from the earth, Saue Noe onely remayned, and they that were with him in the Arcke. And the waters preuayled ypon the earth, an hundreth and fiftie dayes.

TMEN God remembred Noe and all the beastes, and all the catell that were with him in the Areke, and eaused a wynde to come vpon the earth: and $\mathfrak{y}$ waters ceassed, and the fountaynes of the depe and the wyndowes of heauen were stopte, and the rayne of heane was forbydden, and the waters ranne styll awaye from y earth, and decreased after an hundreth and fiftye dayes.

Vpon the seuentene daye of the seuenth moneth rested the Areke vpon the mountaynes of Ararat. And the waters wēte awaye and deereased vntyll the tenth moneth: for the first daye of the tenth moneth, the toppes of the mountaynes appeared.

After fourtie dayes Noe opened $\dot{y}$ wyndow of the Arcke which he had made, © sent forth a rauen, which flew out, and * came agayne, fintyll the waters were dryed vp vpo the earth.

Then sent he forth a doue from him, to wete, whether the waters were falle ypon the earth. But when $\mathfrak{y}$ doue coude fynde no [^32]restynge place for hir fete, she came agayne vnto him in to the Areke, for the waters were yet ypon the face of atl the earth. And he put out his hande, and toke her to him in to the Arke.

Then he abode yet seuen dayes mo, $\tau$ sent out the doue agayne out of the Arke: $\tau$ she returned into him aboute the enen tyde: and beholde, she had broken of a leaf of an olyue tre, a bare it in hir nebb. Then Noe perceaued, that the waters were abated rpon the earth. Neuertheles he taried yet seuen other dayes, and sent forth the doue, which came nomore to him agarne.

In the sixte hundreth and one yeare of Noes age, vpon the first daye of $\stackrel{f}{f}$ first moneth, the waters were dryed vp spon the earth. Then Noe toke of the hatches of the Arke, and sawe ${ }_{y}^{t}$ the face of the earth was drye. So vpon the seuen and twentye daye of the seconde moneth the whole earth was drye.

Then spake God unto Noe, and sayde: Go ont of the Arke, thou and thy wrfe, and thy sonnes, and thy sonnes wyues with the. As for all the beastes that are with the, what so euer flesh it be (both foule $\tau$ eatell and all maner of wormes that erepe vpon the earth) let them go out with the, and be ye occupied rpon the earth, "growe and multiplye pon the earth.

So Noe wente out, with his sonnes, and with his wife, and with his sonnes wyues. All the beastes also and all the wormes, and all the foules, and all that crepte upon the earth, wente out of the Arke, euery one unto his like.

And Noe buylded an altare rnto ${ }^{\circ}$ LORDE. ${ }^{b}$ and toke of all maner of cleane beastes $\pi$ of all maner of cleane foules, and offred brēt sacrifices rpon $\stackrel{\circ}{\circ}$ altare And $\stackrel{8}{2}$ LORDE smelled the swete sauoure, $\pi$ sayde in his hert: I wyl hence forth curse the earth nomore for mas sake, for the mmaginacion of mans hert is euell, euen from the very youth of him. Therfore from hēce forth I will nomore smyte all that lyueth, as I haue done. Nether shall sowynge tyme and haruest, colde and heate Sommer and wynter, daye and night ceasse so longe as the earth endureth.

Farthermore, God sayde rnto Noe and to his sonnes with him: ${ }^{\text {a }}$ Beholde. I make my couenaunt with you, and with youre sede after you, and with euery lyuynge creature that is with you, both foule, catell, and all beastes ypon the earth with you, of all that is gone out of the Arke, what so euer beast of the earth it be: ' And thus I make my couenaunt with you, that hence forth all flesh shal not be destroyed with the waters of eny floude, and from hence forth there shall come no floude to destroye the earth.

And God sayde: This is the token of my couenaunt which I haue made betwene me and you, and all lyuynge creatures amonge you for euermore: My bowe will I set in the cloudes, and it shal be the token of my couenaunt betwene me and $\hat{y}$ earth: so that whà I brynge cloudes rpon the earth, the bowe shal appeare in the eloudes. The somnes of Noe which wente out of the Arke, are these: Sem, Ham and Iaphet.

As for Ham, he is the father of Canaia. These are Noes thre sonnes, of whom all londes were ouerspred.

Noe beganne to take hede vito $\mathfrak{y}$ tyllinge of the grounde, a planted a vyniarde. ${ }^{a}$ And dranke of the wyne, and was dronken, and laye vncouered in his tente. Now when Hā the father of Canaan sawe his fathers preuities, he tolde his two brethren without. So whan Noe awaked from his wyne, and perceaued what his yonger sonne had done vnto him, he sayde: Cursed be Canaan, and a seruaunt of seruauntes be he vnto his brethren. He sayde morouer: Praysed be the LORDE God of Sem, and Canaan be his seruaunt. God increase Iaphet, and let him dwell in the tentes of Sem, and Canaan be his seruaunt.

And Noe lyued after the floude thre hundreth af fiftie yeare, so $\mathfrak{y}$ his whole age was ix. hūdreth and fyftie yeare, and so he dyed.

ar $T$HIS is the generacion of the childre of Noe, Sem, Ham, and laphet, a they begat children after the floude.
${ }^{\circ}$ The children of Iaphet are these: Gomer, Magog, Madai, Iauan, Tubal, Mesech, and Thyras. The childre of Gomer are these : Ascenas, Riphat and Togarma. The children of Iauan are these: Elisa, Tharsis, Cithim and Dodanim: Of these are deuided the Iles of $\dot{y}$ Heithen in their countrees, euery one after his speach, kynred and people.

The childrè of Ham are these: Chus, Misraim, Phut and Canaan. The children of Chus are these: Seba, Heuila Sabtha, Reyma and Sabthecha.
3 The children of Reyma are these: Sheba and Dedā. Chus also begat Nemrod, which beganne to be mightie in the earth, and was a mightie hunter in the sight of the LORDE. Therof commeth the prouerbe: This is a mightie hunter before the LORDE like as Nemrod. And the origenall of his kyngdome was ${ }^{c}$ Babel, Erech, Acad a Chalne in y londe of Synear. Out of that lōde came Assur, [^35]and buylded Niniue, and $\mathfrak{y}$ stretes of $\mathfrak{y}$ cite, and Calah, and Ressen betwene Ninyue a Calah: This is a greate cite. ${ }^{d}$ Mizraim begat Ludim, Enamim, Leabin, Naphtuhim, Pathrusin © Casluhim, from whence came the Plilistynes and Capthorims. Canaā also begat Zidon his eldest somne, a Heth, Iebusi, Emori, Girgosi, Hiui, Arki, Sini, Aruadi, Zemari đ Hamati: frō whence $\mathfrak{y}_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{k}}$ kymeds of $\dot{y}$ Cananites are dispersed abrode. And $\mathfrak{y}$ Coastes of $\dot{y}$ Cananites were frō Sidō forth thorow Gerar wnto Gasa, tyll thou comest vito Sodoma, Gomorra, Adama, Zeboin, a ynto Lasa. And these are his children: Elā, Assur, Arphachad, Lud a Aram. The childré of Aram are these: Vz, Hul, Gether a Mas.

And Arphachsad begat Sala, and Sala begat Eber. Eber begat two somnes: the name of the one was Peleg, because that in his tyme the worlde was deuyded, and his brothers name was Iaketan, And Iaketan begat Almodad, Saleph, Hazarmaphet, Iarah, Hadoram, Vsal, Dikela, Obal, Abimael, Seba, Ophir, Heuila a Iobab: All these are $\dot{y}$ childre of Iaketan. And their dwellynge was from Mesa, tyll thou come rnto Sephar a mountayne of $\hat{y}$ east. These are $f$ children of Sem in their generacions, tunges, londes and people.

Serug was thirtie yeare olde, and begat Nahor, and lyued therafter two hundreth yeare, and begat sonnes a doughters.

Nahor was nyene and twentye yeare olde, and begat Terah, and lyued therafter an hundreth and nyentene yeare, and begat somes and doughters.

Terah was seuentie yeare olde, and begat Abram, Nahor and Haran.

These are the generations of Terab: Terah begat Abram, Nahor and Haran. ${ }^{b}$ And Haran begat Lot, but Harī dyed before Terah his father in $f$ londe where he was borne, at Vr in Chaldea.

1ND ẙ LORDE sayde vnto Abram: ${ }^{e}$ Get the out of thy countre, and from thy kynred, and out of thy fathers house, in to a londe which I wil shew the. And I wil make of the a mightie people, and wyll blesse the, and make the a greate name, yee thou shalt be a very blessynge. $f$ I wil blesse them that blesse the, and curse them that curse the: and in the shal all the generacions of the earth be blessed.

Then wente Abram out, as the LORDE commaunded him, and Lot wente with him. Fyue a seuentie yeare olde was Abrā, whan he wente out of Haran. So Abram toke Sarai his wife, and Lot his brothers sonne, with all their goodes which they had gotten, and soules which they begat in Harā, and departed to go in to y londe of Canaan. ${ }^{5}$ And whe they were come in to the same londe, he wente thorow, tyll he eame vinto the place of Sichem, and vnto the Okegroue of More: " for y Cananites dwelt in y lode at y same time.

Then the LORDE appeared vnto Abrā, a sayde: 'This londe wit I geue vnto thy sede. And there he buylded an aulter into $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE, which appeared vuto him. Thē brake he rp frō thēee, vnto a mountayne $y^{t}$ laye on ${ }^{8}$ east syde of the cite of Bethel, a pitched his tent : so $\frac{t}{y}$ he had Bethel on the west side, and Ay on $\dot{y}$ east syde: a there buylded he an altare also vito the LORDE, a called vpon the name of the LORDE. Afterwarde departed Abram farther, a toke his iourneye southwarde. But there came a derth in the londe.

Then wente Abram downe in to Egipte to kepe himself there as a straunger, for the derth was sore in the londe. And whan he

31 Now whan he came in to Egipte, ${ }^{\circ}$ Egip-
 Pharaos prynces sawe her also, a praysed her before him. Then was she brought in to Pharaos house, and Abram was well intreated for hir sake: and he had shepe, oxé, and he Asses, seruauntes, maydës, she Asses and Camels.
${ }^{b}$ But ý LORDE plaged Pharao © his house with greate plages, because of Sarai Abrās wife. Then Pharao called Abrā vnto him, and sayde: Why hast thou dealt thus with me? Wherfore toldest thou not me at the first, $\dot{y}_{y}$ she was thy wife? Why saydest thou then, that she was thy sister? Wherfore I toke her to my wife. And now lo, there is thy wife, take her, and go thy waye. He gave his officers also a charge ouer him, to conveye him out, and his wife, and all that he had.

a CO Abrā departed out of Egipte, with his wife, a with all $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ he had, 5 Lot with him also, towarde $\dot{y}$ south. Abram was very rich in catell, siluer a golde. And he wente on forth from the south vnto Bethel, vnto the place where his tent was at $\mathfrak{y}$ first, betwene ${ }^{c}$ Bethel and Ay: euen vnto ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{y}}$ place where he had made the altare before, it where he called vpon the name of the LORDE. Lot also which wente with him, had shepe, greate catell a tentes: so $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ the londe was not able to receane them, that they might dwell together: for ${ }^{d}$ the substaunce of their riches was so greate, that they coude not dwell together. And there fell a strife betwene the hirdmen of Abrams catell, and the hirdmen of Lots catell. The Cananites also and the Pheresites dwelt at that tyme in the londe. ${ }^{\text {c }}$
Then sayde Abram vnto Lot: O let there be no strife betwene me and the, and betwene my hyrdmen and thine, for we are brethre ${ }^{f}$ ls not all the whole londe open before the?

[^38]Departe fro me, I praye the. If thou wilt go to the left hande, I wil take the right: Or yf thou wilt go to the right hande, I wil take the left. Then Lot lift vp his eyes, and behelde all the countre rounde aboute lordī, that it was a plenteous countre of water. For before the LORDE destroyed Sodoma and Gomorra, it was rounde aboute Zoar, euen as the pleasamnt garden of the LORDE, and as the londe of Egipte.

Then Lot chose all the coastes of Iordā and toke his iourney towarde $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ East. ${ }^{8}$ And so the one brother departed from the other. Abram dwelt in the lande of Canaan, and Lot in the cities of the same coastes, and pitched his tent towarde Sodome. But $\dot{y}$ men of Sodome were wicked, and ${ }^{h}$ synned exceadingly agaynst the LORDE.

Now whan Lot was departed from Abram, the LORDE saide vato $\Lambda$ bram: Lift vp thine eyes, and loke from the place where thou dwellest, northwarde, southwarde, eastwarde, and westwarde: for all the londe that thou seist, wyll I geue vito the 'and to thy sede for euer, and wyll make thy sede as the dust of the earth : so that yf a man can nombre the dust of the earth, he shall nombre thy sede also. Arise, and go thorow the londe, in the length and bredth, for I wyl geue it mnto the.

So Abram remoued his tent, and ${ }^{*}$ wente and dwelt in $y$ Okegroue of Mamre, which is in Ebron, and buylded there an altare vito the LORDE.

Then Abraham lift vp his eyes, and sawe behynde him a ramme, holde fast by the hornes in the breres, and wente, and toke the ramme, and offred him for a brent sacrifice, in steade of his sonne. And Abraham ealled the place: The LORDE shall prouyde. Therfore it is a comon sayenge yet this daye: Vpon the mountayne shal the LORDE prouyde.

And the angell of the LORDE cryed vnto Abraham from heauen the seconde tyme, and sayde: ${ }^{b}$ I haue sworen by myne owne self (sayeth the LORDE) that for so moch as thou hast done this, and hast not spared thine onely sonne, I wyll prospere and multiplye thy sede as the starres of heauen, and as the sonde vpon the see shore. ${ }^{c}$ And thy sede shall possesse the gates of his enemies: and tin thy sede shal all the nacions of the earth be blessed, because thou hast herkened vnto my voyce.
So Abraham turned ageyne to the yonge men, and they gat vp, and wente together vnto Berseba, and dwelt there.

[^47]After these actes it fortuned, that it was tolde Abraham: Beholde, Milea hath borne children also vnto thy brother Nahor: namely, $\ddagger$ Hus $\hat{y}$ eldest, and $\S$ Bus his brother, and Kemnel, of whom came the Syrians: and Cesed, and Haso, and Pildas, and Iedlaph and Bethuel. And Bethuel begat Rebecea. These eight dyd Milea beare vnto Nahor Abrahams brother. And his concubyne called Rehuma, bare also: namely, Theba, Sahan, Thahas, and Maacha.

SARA was an hundreth and seue and twentye yeare olde: so longe lyued she, and dyed in the head cite which is called Hebron, in the lande of Canaan. ${ }^{d}$ Then wente Abraham, to mourne and wepe for her. Then answered Ephron the Hethite vato Abraham, that the Hethites might heare, before all that wente out and in at the gates of his eite, and sayde: No my lorde, but heare me: As for the felde, and the caue also that is therin, I geue it the : and in the sight of my people I geue it the, to burye thy deed in.

Then Abraham thanked the people of the londe, and talked with Ephron, that the people of the londe might heare, and sayde: Heare me then, Receane of me the money that I Ephron answered Abraham, and sayde vnto him: Heare me my lorde: The felde is worth foure hundreth Sycles of syluer: but what is that betwixte me and the? Burye thy deed. Abraham herkened vnto Ephron, and weyed him the money which he had sayde, that the Hethites might heare: namely foure hundreth syluer syeles of eurrant money amonge marehauntes.

Thus Ephrons felde (where in the dubble caue is) which lyeth ouer before Mamre, euen the felde and the caue, was made sure for Abrahams owne good, with all the trees of the felde also rounde aboute, in the sight of the Hethites, and of all that go out and in at the gates of his cite. Then Abraham buried Sara his wife in the dubble caue of the felde, that lyeth ouer before Mamre (that is, Hebron) in the londe of Canaan. So the felde and the cave therin was made sure of the Hethites vito Abraham, for a possession to bury in.

${ }_{3}$ ABRAHAM was olde and well stricken in age, and the LORDE had blessed him in all thinges. And he sayde vuto his eldest seruaunt of his house, which had the rule of all his goodes: "Laye thine hāde vnder my thye, that I maye make the sweare by $\frac{8}{y}$ LORDE the God of heauen and earth, that thou "take no wife vito my sonne amonge $y$ doughters of $\stackrel{8}{y}$ Cananites, (amonge whom ' 1 dwell) but that thou go in to my countre, and * to myne owne kynred, and brynge my sonne Isaac a wife.

The seruaunt sayde: What and the woman wyl not folowe me in to this countre? shal I then eary thy sonne agayne in to yonder londe, where thou camest out of? Abraham sayde Into him: Beware of that, that thon brynge not my sonne thither agayne. So the seruaunt toke ten Camels of the Camels of his master and departed, and had with him of all maner of goodes of his master, and gat him vp, and departed vnto Mesopotamia, to the cite of Nahor. Then let he the Camels lye downe without before the cite besyde a well of water in the euenynge, aboute the tyme that the wemen vsed to go forth, and to drawe water. And he sayde:

O LORDE, thou God of my master Abraham, mete me to daye, and shew merey vnto my master Abraham. Lo, I stonde here besyde the well of water, $\tau$ the mens donghters of this cite wyll come fortl to drawe water: Now yf there come a damsell, to whom I saye: bowe downe thy pytcher, a let me drynke, and yf she saye: drynke, and I wyll geue thy Camels drynke also: That y same be she, whom thou hast prouyded for thy seruaunt Isaac: $\underset{x}{ }$ that I maye knowe by $\dot{y}$ same that thou lrast shewed merey pon my master.

And or euer he had left of speakynge, beholde, Rebecea the donghter of Bethuel (which was the somne of Milca, that was the wyfe of Nahor Abrahams brother) came forth, and base a prteher vpon hir shulder, and she was a very fayre damsell of face, and yet a virgin, and miknowne of eny man: She wente downe to the well, and fylled hir pitcher, and came vp agayne. Then ranne the seruaunt to mete her, and sayde: Let me drynke a litle water out of thy pitcher. And she sayde: drynke syr:

And haistely let she downe the pitcher in hir hande, and gave him drynke. And whan she had geuen him drynke, she sayde: I wyll drawe for thy Camels also, tyll they have dronke ynough. And she made haist, and poured out hir pitcher in to the trough, and rame agatye to the well to drawe, and drew for all his Camels. 31 Then the man bowed himself, and thanked the LORDE, and sayde: Praysed be the LORDE the God of my master Abraham, which hath not withdrawen his mercy and his trueth fro my master, for the LORDE hath brought me the waye to my masters brothers house. And the damsell ranne and tolde all this in hir mothers house. And Rebecca had a brother called Laban.

And Laban ranne to the man without by the well syde: and that came by the reason that he sawe the earynges, and the bracelettes ypon his sisters handes, and herde the wordes of Rebecea his syster, that she sayde: thus spake the man vuto me.

And whan he came to the man, beholde, he stode by the Camels at the well syde. And he sayde: Come in * thou blessed of the LORDE, wherfore stondest thou without? I haue dressed the house, and made rowme for $\stackrel{f}{6}$ Camels. So he brought the man in to $\dot{y}$ house, and vnbridled the Camels, and gaue them litter and prouender, and water to wash his fete, and the mens that were with him, and set meate before him.

Neuertheles he sayde: I wil not eate, tyll I hane fyrst tolde myne earāde. ${ }^{b}$ They answered: Tell on. He sayde: I am Abrahams seruaunt, and the LORDE hath prospered my master richely, so $\frac{t}{y}$ he is become greate: and he hath geuen him shepe and oxé, syluer and golde, seruauntes and maidens, Camels and Asses: yee and 'Sara my masters wife hath borne my master a some in hir olde age: vnto him hath he geuen all that he hath.

And my master hath taken an ooth of me and saide: Thou shalt not take a wife for my sonne amonge the doughters of the Cananites, in whose lande I dwell, but go thy waye to my fathers house and to myne owne kynced, and there take a wyfe for my sonne. So I came this daye vito the well of water, and sayde: O LORDE thou God of my master Abraham, Yf thou hast prospered my iourney that I go: Beholde, I stonde here by the well of water: Now yf there come forth a virgin to draw water, and I saye vito her: gene me a litle water to drinke out of thy pitcher, and she saye vnto me: Drynke thou, and I wyll drawe water for thy Camels also: that the same be the womà, which the LORDE hath prouyded for my masters sonne. Now or ener I had spoken out these wordes in my hert, beholde, Rebecea commeth forth with a piteher rpon hir shulder, and goeth downe to the well, and draweth.

Then sayde I: geue me a drynke. And immediatly she toke downe the pitcher fro hir shulder, and sayde: drynke, and I wyll geue thy Camels drynke also. So I dranke, and she gaue the Camels also to drynke. And I axed her, and sayde: Doughter, whose art thou? She answered: I am $\dot{y}$ doughter of Bethuel the sonne of Nahor, whom Milea bare vnto him. ${ }^{8}$HERE came a derth in the londe, passynge the other ${ }^{d}$ that was in Abrahams tyme. And Isaac wente to Gerar, vinto Abimelech the kynge of $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{f}}$ Philistynes. And the Allmightie God blesse the, and make the frutefull, and multiplye the, (that thou mayest be a multitude of people) and geue the the [^52]blessynge of Abraham vnto $\hat{y} \underset{z}{ }$ thy sede with the, that thou mayest possesse the lande, wherin thou art a straunger,* which God gaue vnto Abraham. So lsaae let Iacob departe, that he might go in to Mesopotamia vuto Laban the sonue of Bethuel of Siria, y brother of Rebecea, his and Esans mother.

Now when Esau sawe that Isaac had blessed Iacob, and let him departe in to Mesopotamia, that he might take a wife there: and $\frac{t}{y}$, as he blessed him, he charged him, t sayde: 'Thou shalt not take a wife of the doughters of Canaan, and that Iacob obeyed his father and his mother, and was gone mnto Mesopotamia: seynge also that Isaae his father loked not gladly spon the doughters of Canaan, he wente his waye vnto Ismael, and besyde the wyues that he had afore, he toke ${ }^{a}$ Mahaloth the doughter of lsmael (Abrahàs sonne) the sister of Nebaioth, to wile.
C. As for Iacob, he departed from Bersaba, and wente mito Haran and eame to a place, where he taried all night: for the Sonne was downe. And he toke a stone of $\mathfrak{y}$ place, a put it vnder his hearle, and layed him downe in $\hat{y}$ same place to slepe. And he dreamed, and beholde, there stode rpon ${ }^{\circ}$ earth, a ladder, whose toppe reached vito the heauen. Aud beholde, the angels of God ${ }^{b}$ wente vp and downe ypon it, and the LORDE stode ypon it, and sayde:
'I am the LORDE God of thy father Abraham, and the God of Isaae: The londe $\frac{{ }^{t}}{}$ thou lyest rpon, wyll geue vnto the, ${ }^{\text {d }}$ and to thy sede: and thy sede shal be as $\dot{y}$ dust of $\mathfrak{y}$ earth. And thon shalt sprede forth towarde the west, east, north. and south: and "thorow the and thy sede shall all the kynreds spon earth be blessed. Ind beholde, 1 am with $\hat{y}$, and wyll kepe the where so euer thou goest, it wyl bryge the hither agayne in to this lande: Cior I wil not leane the, tyll I have made good, all that I have promysed the.

Now whan lacob awaked from his slepe, he saide: surely the LORDE is in this place, and I knew not. And he was afraied, and satede: How fearfull is this place? here is no thinge els but an honse of God, a gate vato heauce. Aud lacob arose early in the mornynge, and toke the stone $f$ that he had layed inder his heade, and set it rp, and poured oyle vpon it. And he called the place Bethel, but afore the cite was called Lus. And lacob made a rowe, and sayde: ${ }^{\text {T }}$ Yf God wyll be with me, and kepe me in this iourney ${ }^{t}$ I go a gene me bred to eate, and clothinge to put on, and brynge me peaceably home agayne vnto my father: 'The shall the LORDE be my God, and this stone that I have set vp, shal be an house of God: and all that thou geuest me, I wyl geue the the tenth therof.

THEN Iacob gat him yp vpon his fete, and wente in to the east countre, a loked aboute him, and beholde, there was a well in the felde, and $\dot{y}$ flockes of shepe therby, for the flockes dranke of the well. And there laye a greate stone at the welles mouth, and thyther they rsed to brynge the flockes, and to roule the stone from y mouth of the well, and to geue the shepe drynke, a so they put the stone agayne vpon the welles mouth in to his place.
And lacob sayde rnto them: Brethren, whēce be ye? They answered: we are of Haran. He sayde vuto them: Knowe ye Laban the sonne of Nahor? They answered: We knowe him well. He sayde: "Is he in good health? They answered: he is in good health. And lo, there commeth his doughter Rachel with the shepe. He sayde: It is yet hye daye, $\pi$ is not yet tyme to dryue in the eatell: gene the shepe to drynke, a go youre waye, a fede them. They answered: We can not, tyll all the flockes be brought together, and tyll we roule the stone from the welles mouth, $\pi$ so geue the shepe drynke.

Whyle he yet talked with them, Rachel came with hir fathers shepe, for she kepte $\dot{y}$ shepe. Whan lacob sawe Rachel $y$ doughter of Laban his mothers brother, and the shepe of Laban his mothers brother, he wète, I rouled the stone from the welles month, and gaue his mothers brother shepe to drynke, and kyssed Rachel, lift vp his voyce, and wepte, and tolde her, $\dot{y}^{t}$ he was hir fathers brother, and $\stackrel{f}{y}$ some of Rebecea. Then rame she, and tolde her father.

Whà Laban herde of Iacob his sisters sonne, he rame to mete him, and enbraced him, and kyssed him, and brought him in to his house.

[^53]And so he tolde him all this matter. Thē sayde Laban vnto him: Wel, thou art my bone and my flesh. Abyde with me a moneth longe. But after that saide he vnto Iacob: Because thou art my brother, shalt thou therfore serue me for nought? Tell me, what shall thy wages be. Laban had two doughters, the eldest was called Lea, a the yongest Rachel. And Lea was tender eyed, but Rachel was beutyfull a well fauoured of face, and Iacob loued her well, and sayde: I will serue the seuen yeare, for Rachel thy yongest doughter. Laban answered: It is better that I gene her the, then vito another : tary thou with me.
So lacob serued seuen yeare for Rachel, and they semed vnto him but few dayes, he loued her so well. And lacob saide vnto Laban: geue me my wyfe, for the tyme is come that I shulde lye with her. Thē Laban bad all the people of that place, and made a mariage. But at eue he toke his doughter Lea, and brought her in vnto him, and he laye with her. And Laban gaue Zilpa his mayde vnto his doughter Lea to be hir mayde.

But on the morow, beholde, it was Lea. And he sayde vito Laban: Why hast thou done this vito me? Haue not I serued $\mathfrak{y}$ for Rachel? Why hast thou then begyled me? Laban answered: It is not the maner in oure countre, to mary the yongest before the eldest. Holde out this weke, © I will geue the this also, for the seruyce $\dot{y}$ thou shalt do me yet seuen yeares more. lacob dyd so, a helde out $\stackrel{+}{y}$ weke. Then gaue he him Rachel his doughter to wyfe. And Laban gaue Bilha his mayden vnto Rachel his doughter to be hir mayden. So he laye with Rachel also, $\pi$ loued Rachel more thē Lea, and serued him yet seuen yeares more.
B. But when the LORDE sawe, that Lea was nothinge regarded, he made her frutefull, and Rachel baren. And Lea cōceaued, and bare a sonne, whom she called Ruben, and sayde : a The LORDE hath loked vpon my aduersite. Now wyll my huszbande loue me. And she conceaued agayne, and bare a sonne, and sayde: The LORDE hath herde that I am despysed, and hath geuē me this also, and she called him Symeon. She cōceaned yet agayne, and bare a sonne, and sayde: Now wyll my huszbande kepe me company agayne,
for 1 haue borne him thre sonnes, therfore called she his name Leui. She conceaued $\hat{y}$ fourth tyme, and bare a sonne, and sayde: Now wyll I geue thankes whto the LORDE, therfore called she him Iuda, and left bearynge.

WHEN Rachel sawe that she bare no children vnto lacob, she had enuye at hir sister, a saide vnto lacob: Geue me childrē also, or els I an but deed. But lacob was very wroth at Rachel, © sayde: Am I then in Gods steade, which kepeth $\hat{y}$ frute of thy wombe from $\hat{y}$ ? Neuertheles she sayde: Beholde, there is Bilha my mayden, lye with her, $\frac{t}{y}$ she maye beare rpon my lappe, $\mathbb{c}$ that I maye be increased by her. And so she gaue him Bilha hir mayden to wyfe.

And Iacob laye with her. So Bilha conceaued, and bare Iacob a sonne. Then sayde Rachel: God hath geuen sentence on my syde, and herde my voyce, and genē me a sonne, therfore called she him Dan. Bilha Rachels mayde cōceaued agayne, and bare another sonne vnto lacob. Then sayde Rachel: God hath turned it with me, and my sister, and I haue gotte the vpper hande. And she called him Nephthali.

Now whan Lea sawe that she had left bearynge, she toke Sitpa hir mayde, and gaue her vnto Iacob to wyfe. So Silpa Leas mayde bare Jacob a somne. Then saide Lea: This is good lucke, a she called lim Gad. After this Silpa Leas mayde bare lacob another sonne. Then sayde Lea: Well is me, for the doughters will call me blessed, and she called him Asser.

Ruben wente out in the tyme of $\dot{y}$ wheate haruest, and founde Mandragoras in the felde, and brought them home ynto his mother Lea. Then sayde Rachel vato Lca: Geue me some of thy somes Mādragoras. She answered: Hast thou not ynough that thou hast taken awaye my huszbande, but wilt take awaye my sonnes Mandragoras also? Rachel saide: Wel, let him lye with the this night for thy sonnes Mandragoras. Now whan Jacob came home at cuen from the felde, Lea wente forth to mete him, and sayde: Thou shalt lye with me, for 1 haue bought the for my sonnes Mandragoras.

And he slepte with her that night. And God herde Lea, and she conceaued, and bare lacob the fifth some, a sayde: God hath rewarded me, because I gaue my mayden vnto my huszbande, and she called him Isachar. Lea conceaued yet agayne, and bare Iacob the sixte sonne, and sayde: God hath endewed me with a good dowry. Now wyll my huszbande dwell with me agayne, for I haue borne him sixe sonnes, a she called him Zabulon. After that she bare a doughter, whom she called * Dina.

Neuertheles God thought vpö Rachel, and herde her, and made her frutefull. Then she conceaued, and bare a sonne, and sayde: God hath taken awaye my rebuke, and she called him Ioseph, ${ }^{a}$ and sayde: God geue me yet another sonne.

Now whan Rachel had borne Ioseph, Iacob sayde vnto Laban: ${ }^{6}$ Let me go, a departe in to my place and vinto myne owne lande: geue me my wyues and my children, (for the which I haue serued the) $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ I maye go: for thou knowest, what seruyce I haue done the. Laban sayde vnto him: Can I not fynde fauoure in thy sight? I perceaue, that God 'hath blessed me for thy sake. Appoynte thou the rewarde, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ I shal geue the. But he saide mnto him: Thou knowest how I haue serued the, and what maner of catell thou hast vader me. Thou haddest but litle afore I came hither, but now is it growne in to a multitude, and the LORDE hath blessed $\dot{y}$ 玉 for my sake. And now whan shall I loke to myne owne house also? He saide: What shal I then geue the?

Iacob sayde: Thou shalt geue me nothinge at all, but yf thou wilt do this for me $\stackrel{t}{y}^{\text {y }}$ I saye, then wyll I fede and kepe thy shepe agayne. I wyll go thorow all thy flockes to daye, and separate thou from anonge them all the shepe that be spotted and partye coloured, and all blacke shepe amonge the lambes. Now loke what shalbe partie coloured and spotted amoge the kyddes, the same shal be my rewarde: so shal my righteousnes testifie with me to daye or tomorow, whan it cometh vnto my rewarde before the, so that, what so euer is not spotted and partye coloured amonge the kyddes, and blacke amoge the lambes, let that be theft with me.

Then sayde Laban: Beholde, let it be so as thou hast sayde. And that same daye he sundered out the speckled and partye coloured goates, and all the spotted and partye coloured kyddes (where there was eny whyte vpon them) and all that was black amonge the lambes, and put them vnder the hande of his children, and made rowme of thre dayes iourney wyde betwixte him and Iacob. So Iacob kepte the residue of Labans flocke.

But Iacob toke staues of grene wyllies, hasell and of chestnottrees, and pylled whyte strekes in them, and layed the staues that he had pylled, in the drynkinge troughes before the flocke, which came there to drynke, that they shulde conceaue, whan they came to drynke. So the flockes conceaued ouer $\dot{y}$ staues, and brought forth speckelde, spotted and partye coloured.

Then Iacob parted y lambes, and put them to the flocke vato the spotted: and all that was blacke in Labans flocke, that put he vnto the spotted. And he made him a flocke of his owne, which he put not vnto Labans flocke. Neuertheles in the first buckynge tyme of the flockes, he layed the staues in the drynkinge troughes before the eyes of the flockes, that they shulde conceaue ouer the staues. But in the latter buckynge tyme he layed them not in. So the later were Labans, but the firstlinges were Iacobs. Thus the man became exceadinge riche, so that he had many shepe, maydens a seruauntes, Camels and Asses.

HE herde also of $\dot{y}$ wordes of Labans children, that they sayde: Iacob hath brought all oure fathers good vnto him self, a of oure fathers good hath he gotten these riches. And lacob behelde Labans countenaunce, ъ beholde, it was not towarde him as yesterdaye and yeryesterdaye.

And the LORDE sayde vnto him: ${ }^{d}$ Departe agayne to thy fatherlāde, and to thy kynred, I wyll be with the. Then sent Iacob and bad call Rachel and Lea in to the felde to his flockes, and sayde vnto them: I se youre fathers countenaunce, that it is not towarde me like as yesterdaye and yeryesterdaye: but the God of my father hath bene with me. And ye knowe, that I haue serued youre father with all my power.

And he hath disceaued me, and chaunged my wages now ten tymes. But God hath not suffred him, to do me harme. Yf he sayde: The partye coloured shalbe thy rewarde, then the whole flocke bare partye coloured. Yf he sayde: The speckelde shalbe thy rewarde, the the whole flocke bare speckelde. 'Thus hath God withdrawen youre fathers goodes from him, and geuen them vnto me. For whan the buckynge tyme came, I lift vp myne eyes and sawe in a dreame, and beholde, the rammes leapte vpon the flocke that was speckelde, spotted, a partye coloured.

And the angel of God sayde vnto me in a dreame: lacob. And I answered: here am I. He sayde: lift vp thine eyes, and beholde, the rammes leape vpon the speckelde, spotted, and partie coloured flocke: for 1 haue sene all $\frac{f}{y}$ Laban doth vnto the. I am y God at * Bethel, where thou dyddest anoynte the stone, © maydest a vowe there monto me. Get the up now, a departe out of this londe, I go agayne in to the londe of thy kynred.

Then answered Rachel and Lea, and sayde ynto him: As for vs, we haue no porcion ner inheritaüce more in oure fathers house, t he hath coūted vs as straūgers, for he hath solde vs, $\pi$ spent vp oure wages. Therfore hath God withdrawe oure fathers riches from hin vnto vs a oure children. What so euer now God hath sayde vnto the, that do.

So lacob gat vp , and set his children and wyues vpon Camels, and caried awaye all his catell and all his substaunce, that he had gotten at Mesopotamia, $\frac{t}{y}$ he might come vnto Isaac his father in the lande of Canaan. Labä was gone to clyppe his flocke, ${ }^{a}$ and Rachel stale hir fathers + ymages. Thus dyd lacob steale awaie ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ hert of Laban $\mathrm{y}^{\text {y }}$ Syrian, in $\dot{t}$ he tolde him not that he fled. So he fled, a all that was his, gat vp, and passed ouer the water, © wente straight towarde the mount Gilead.

Vpon the thirde daye it was tolde Laban, that lacob fled. And he toke his brethrē vnto him, and folowed after him seuen dayes iourney, and ouertoke him vpon the mount Gilead. But God came vnto Laban the Syrian in a dreame by night, a sayde vnto him: Bewarre, that thou speake nothinge to lacob but good. And Labā drew nye vnto lacob. As for Iacob, he had pytched his tente ypon the mount. And Laban with his brethre pytched his tent also vpon the same mount Gilead.

[^54]Then sayde Laban vnto lacob: What hast thou done, that thou hast stollen awaie my hert, and caried awaye my doughters, as though they had bene taken captyue with $\dot{y}$ swerde? Wherfore keptest thou that secrete, that thou woldest flye, and hast stollen awaye fro me, and toldest me not, that 1 might haue brought the on the waye with myrth, with synginge, with tabrettes and harpes? and hast not suffred me to kysse my children and doughters? Thou hast done foolishly, and so moch might I haue made, that I coude haue done you euell: but youre fathers God saide yesterdaye vnto me: Bewarre, that thou speake nothinge vnto lacob but good. And for so moch then as thou woldest nedes departe, and longedest sore after thy fathers house, why hast thou stollen away my goddes?

Iacob answered and sayde vnto Laban: I was afrayed, that thou shuldest haue taken away thy doughters fro me: but loke by whom thou fyndest thy goddes, let the same dye here before oure brethren. Seke that thine is by me, and take it awaye. (But he knew not, that Rachel had stollen them.) Then wente Laban in to lacobs tent and in to Leas tent, and in to both the maydens tētes, and founde nothinge: and out of Leas tente he wente in to Rachels tent. Then toke Rachel the ymages, and layed them vnder the Camels strawe, and sat downe vpon them. But Laban searched the whole tent, and founde nothinge. Then sayde she vnto hir father: Be not angrie my lorde, that I can not ryse pp vato the: for it goeth with me after the maner of wemen. So he sought, and founde not the ymages.

And Iacob was wroth, and chode with Laban, answered a sayde vito him: What have I trespased or oflended, $\frac{t}{y}$ thou art so whote vpon me? Thou hast searched all my housholde stuff, a what hast thou founde of thy housholde stuff? Laye it here before my brethren a thyne, $\frac{t}{y}$ they maye iudge betwene vs both. Twentye yeare haue I bene with the: thy shepe a goates haue not bene vnfrutefull, the rammes of thy flocke haue I not eaten: Loke what was torne of beastes, I bronght it not wnto $\dot{y}$, I was fayne to paie it my self: thou requyredest it of my hande, whether it were stollen fro me by daye or by night. On the daye tyme the heate cosumed me, and the frost on the night, and my slepe departed fro myne eyes.

Thus have İ serued twentye geare in thy house, fourtene yeares for thy doughters, it sixe for thy flocke, and ten tymes hast thou chaunged my rewarde: a yf the Gorl of my father the God of Abraham, and the feare of Isaac had not bene on my syde, thon haddest latten me go awaye emptye. But God hath loked ypon myne aduersite and laboure, and rebuked the yesterdaye.

Laban answered and sayde: The doughters are my doughters, a the children are my chitdre, and the flockes are my flockes, I all that thou seist is myne. What ean I do this daye minto these my doughters, or to their children whom they have borne? Now therfore come on, let is make a couenaunt (I a thou) which maye be a wytnesse betwene me and the. Then toke lacob a stone, a set it yp (for a piler or markstone) and sayde vnto his brethren: Gather stones. And they toke the stones, and made an heape, a ate ypon the same heape. And Labā called it legar Sahadutha, but Iacob called it Gilead: (either of them after the properte of his language.)

Then sayde Laban: * This heape be wytnesse betwene me and the this daye (therfore is it called Gilead) and a testimony, for he sayde: The LORDE loke betwene me and yf whan we are departed $\dot{y}$ one from $\hat{y}$ other: $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$, thou vexe my doughters, or take other wyues vnto them. There is no ma with vs. but lo, God is the wytnesse betwene me and the. And Laban sayde morouer vnto Iacob: Beholde, this is the heape, and this is the marekstone that I haue set ip betwixte me and the: the same heape be wytnesse, and the same marekstone also be wytuesse, yf I passe oner monto the, or yf thou passe ouer this heape t marckstone vito me, to do eny harme. 'The God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor, and the God of their fathers, be iudge betwene vs.

And lacob sware vato him by the feare of his father Isaac. And lacob offred an offerynge vpon the mount, and ealled his brethre to eate bred. And whan they had eaten, they taried ypou the mount all might. But rpou the morow Laban rose vp early, kyssed his childrē $\tau$ doughters, $\tau$ blessed thè, © departed, and came agayne vito his place. As for lacob, he wente on his iourney, the angels [^55]of God met him. And whan he sawe them. he sayde: It is Gods hoost, a called the same place Mahanaim.

IACOB sent messaungers before him to his brother Lsau + in to the lande of Seir, of the felde of Edon, a commaunded thē, a sayde: Saye thus mito my lorde Esau: Thy seruaunt Iacob sendeth $\frac{\circ}{y}$ this worde: 1 haue bene out with Laban, ic haue bene hither to amonge straungers, t have oxen a Asses, shepe, seruauntes a maydès, and haue sent forth to shewe it the my lorde, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ I might fynde fauoure in thy sight.

The messaungers came agayne unto lacob, and sayde: We came unto thy brother Esau, a he commeth forth also agaynst the with foure hundreth men. Then was lacob sore afrayed, and wyst not what waye to turne him self, a deuyded the people that was with him, and the shepe, and the oxen, ot the Camels in to two droues, t sayde: If Esau come ypon the one drone, and smyte it, the other shal escape.

Lacob sayde morouer: O God of my father Abrahā, God of my father Isaac, LORDE thou that saydest vito me: $\ddagger$ Departe agayne to thine owne londe and to thy kynred, and I wyl do the good: I am to litle for all the mercies and all the trueth that thou hast shewed vito thy seruaunt (for 1 had nomore but this staff whan I wente ouer this lordan, and now am I become two droues) delyuer me from $\dot{y}$ hande of my brother, fro the hāde of Esau, for I am afrayed of him, lest he come and smyte me the mother with the children. axeth the: Whose art thou? © whyther goest thou? and whose are these that thou dryuest before the? Thou shalt saye: They be thy seruaunt Iacobs, which sendeth a present vnto his lorde Esau, and commeth behynde vs him self.

Thus commaunded he the seconde also, and the thirde, and all them that folowed the flockes, and sayde: Like as I haue tolde you, so speake ye vito Esau, whan ye mete him, and saye vnto him also: Beholde, thy seruaut Iacob is behynde vs. For he thought: I wyll reconeyle him with the present that goeth before me, after warde wyll I se him my self, peraduenture he shall receaue me to grace.

So the present wente before him, but he taried in the tente the same night, and rose rp in ${ }^{\circ}$ night, and toke his two wyues and the two maydens and his eleuen sonnes, and wente vnto the foorde of Iacob, toke them and caried them ouer the water, so that all that he had came ouer, and taried him self alone on this syde.
${ }^{a}$ Then wrestled there a man with him vntyll the breake of $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ daye. And he sayde: Let me go, for $\stackrel{\stackrel{y}{y}}{ }$ daye breaketh on. But he answered: I will not let ${ }^{\circ}$ go, excepte thou blesse me. He sayde: What is thy name? He answered: Iacob. He sayde: ${ }^{5}$ Thou shalt nomore be called Iacob, but Israel, for thou hast stryuen with God and with men, and hast preuayled. And Iacob axed him, a sayde: Tell me, what is thy name? But he sayde: 'Why axest thon what my name is? And he blessed him there. And Iacob ealled the place Peniel, for I haue sene God face to face, t my soule is recouered. And as he came ouer frō Peniel, $\stackrel{f}{y}$ Some rose rpō him, a he halted ypon his thye. Therfore eate the children of Israel no vane vpon the senow of $\dot{y}$ thye vnto this daye, because $\hat{y}$ vane vpon the senow of Iacobs thye was touched.

A TACOB lift vp his eyes, a sawe his brother Esau comynge with foure hundreth men: and he deuyded his children vnto Lea vuto Rachel, and to both the maydē, and set the [^56]maydens with their chitdren before, and Lea with hir childré after, and Rachel with loseph hynder most. And he wente before them, and bowed him self to the grounde semen tymes, tyll he came to his brother. *But Esau ranne to mete him, and enbraced him, and fell aboute his neek, at kyssed him, and wepte, and lift vp his eyes, and sawe the wyues with the children, and sayde: What are these with the? He answered: They are the children, which God hath geuen vato thy seruaunt. And the maydens eame forth with their children, and dyd their obeysaunce rnto him.

Lea came forth also with hir childre, and kneled vnto him. Afterwarde came Ioseph and Rachel forth, and kneled vnto him likewrse. And he sayde: What meanest thou with all the droue that I met? He answered: that I might fynde grace in the sight of my lorde. Esau sayde: I haue ynough my brother, kepe that thou hast. Iacob answered: Oh nay, but yf I hane founde grace in thy sight, receane my present of my hande (for I sawe thy face, ${ }^{d}$ as though I had sene the face of God) and be at one with me. Take this present in good worth, that I haue brought $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$, for God hath genen it me, a I hane ynough of all thinges. So he compelled him to take it.

And he sayde: Let vs go ou and take oure iourney, I wyll go in thy eompany. But he sayde vinto him: My lorde, thou knowest that I haue tender children by me, and small and greate catell also, which are yet but yonge: yf they shulde be dryue ouer in one daye, the whole flocke wolde dye. Let my lorde go on before his seruañt. I wyll dryue after fayre and softly, (there after as the eatell $\mathbb{}$ the children can go, tyll I come to my lorde in Seir. Esau sayde: Yet wil I leaue some of my people with the. He answered: What nede is it? Let me but onely fynde grace in the sight of my lorde.

So Esau departed againe the same daye towarde Seir, and Iacob toke his iourney towarde Sucoth, and buylded him an house, and made tētes for his catell. Therfore is the place ealled Sucoth.

DINA ${ }^{\circ}$ doughter of Lea, which she bare vnto lacob, wente out to beholde the doughters of the londe. Whan sichem the some of Hemor the Heuite (which was lorde of the lode) sawe her, he toke her, and laye with her, and forced her, and his hert hanged yon her, and he loued $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ damsell, and talked louyngly with her, and spake to his father Hemor: Get me this mayden to wife.

And lacob molerstode, that Dina his doughter was defyled, and his sonnes were with the catell in the felde, and Iacob helde his tonge tyll they came. Then Hemor the father of Sichem wente forth vnto Iacob to comen with him. In the meane season came lacobs somes from y felde. And whan they herde it, it grened the men, and they were very wroth, that he had wrought foly in Israel, and lyen with lacobs doughter: for so was not the rse to do. Iy some Sichems hert longeth for soure doughter, $O$ geue hir him to wife: make frendshipe with rs, gene vs youre doughters, and take ye oure doughters, and dwell with vs, the londe shall be open wnto you, dwell and occupie, and haue youre possessions therin. And Sichem sayde wnto hir father and brethren: Let me fynde grace with you: loke what ye appoynte me, I will gene it: requyre the dowrye and gift of me hardely, I wyll gene it acordinge as ye wyll axe, onely geue me the damsell to wife.

Then Iacobs somnes answered Sichem and Hemor his father (and spake disceatfully, because their sister Dina was defyled) a sayde vuto them: That can we not do, to gene oure sister to an rncircumeided man : for that were a shame vinto vs.

Neuertheles we wyll consente minto you, yf ye wylle like unto vs, and be circumeided as many as are males amonge you: then will we gene you oure doughters, and take youre doughters suto vs , and dwell with you, and be one people. But yf ye wyll not herken vato [^57]vs, to be circumcided, then wyl we take oure doughter, and go oure waye.

These wordes pleased Hemor and his sonne wel, and the yonge man deferde not to do the same, for he had lust to lacobs doughter: and he was holden in honoure aboue all in his fathers house. Then came Hemor and Sichem his sonne voder $\mathfrak{y}$ gate of cite, and comened with the citisons of the cite, and saide: These men are peaceable with vs, and will dwell in the lande and occupye: now is the londe brode of both the sydes, we wyl take their doughters vito vs, and geue them oure doughters.

But then wyll they consent vato vs, to dwell by vs, and to be one people with ws, yf we circumcyse all the men children amonge vs, like as they are eireumeysed: their catell and goodes, and all that they haue, shal be ours, yf we consent vnto them, that they maye dwel with vs.

And they herkened ynto Hemor and Sichem his some, as many as wente out and in at $\dot{y}$ gate of his cite, and circumeided all the males, that wente out and in at his cite. And vpon the thirde daye (whan it was panefull to them) ${ }^{b}$ the two sonmes of Iacob Simeon and Leui Dinas brethren, toke euery man his swerde, and wente boldly in to the cite, tand slew all the males, and slew Hemor also and Sichem his some with the edge of the swerde, and toke their sister Dina out of Sichems house, and wente their waye.

Then came lacobs somes ouer the slayne, $玉$ and spoyled the cite (becanse they had defyled their sister) and toke their shepe, oxen, Asses, and what so euer was in the cite and in the londe, and all maner of goodes: All their children and wyues toke they eaptyue, and spoyled all $\frac{t}{y}$ was in the houses.

Then sayde his brethree vinto him: Shalt thou be oure kinge, and haue donynio ouer vs? And they hated him yet $\mathfrak{y}$ more, because of his dreame, $\mathbb{I}$ his wordes. And he had yet another dreame, which he tolde his brethrē, © saide: Beholde, I had yet another dreame: Me thought y Sonne đy Moone a eleuen starres made obeisaūce to me. And whā this was tolde his father and his brethré, his father reproued him, a sayde vnto him: What maner of dreame is this, $\frac{y}{y}$ thou hast dreamed? Shall I $\mathbb{a}$ thy mother, $\mathbb{a}$ thy brethren come a fall before $\dot{y}$ vpon the groūde? And his brethre had envie at him. But his father marcked this sayenge.
Now whā his brethren were gone forth to kepe their fathers catell in Sichê, Israel sayde vnto loseph: Do not thy brethren kepe the catell in Sichem? Come, I wil sende the vito thē. He answered: + Here am I. And he sayde: Go thy waye, and loke whether it be well with thy brethren and with $y$ catell, and brynge me worde agayne how it is. And he sent him out of the valley of Hebron, to go vnto Sichem.

Then a certayne man founde him, wandringe out of his waye in the felde, which axed him, and sayde: Whom sekest thou? He answered: I seke my brethren: tell me I pray the where they kepe. The man sayde: 'They are gone from hence, for I herde them saye: let vs go vnto Dothan. Then folowed Ioseph after his brethren, and founde them at Dothan.
Now whan they sawe him a farre of, afore he came at the , they deuysed to sleye him, and sayde one to another: Lo, there cometh the dreamer, $\ddagger$ come on, and let vs sley him, a cast him in a pytt, and saye: a wicked beast hath deuoured him : thè shal it be sene, what his dreames are.

AND it fortuned atter this, that $\dot{y}$ kynge of Egiptes chefe butlar and $\hat{y}$ chete baker offended their lorde the kynge of Egipte. And Pharao was angrie with them, of caused them be put in preson in $\frac{y}{y}$ chefe marshals house, where loseph laye presoner. And the chefe marshall put loseph vuto them, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he might serue them. And so they were in preson for a season.

And they dreamed, both the butlar a the baker in one night, euery mā his owne dreame, and enery dreame had his interpretacio. Now in the mornynge whan losep b came in mto them, and sawe that they loked sadly, he axed them and sayde: Why loke ye so sadly to daye? They answered: We hate dreamed, and hane no man to declare it vnto rs. Ioseph sayde: Interpretinge belongeth vinto God, but tell it me yet.

Then the chefe butlar tolde loseph his dreame, and saide vnto him: I dreamed that there was a ryue before me, which had thre braunches, and it budded, grewe and bare blossoms, and the grapes therof were rype. And I had Pharaos cuppe in my hande, a toke (the grapes) and wronge the in to ${ }^{\circ}$ cuppe, and gaue Pharao the cuppe in his hade.

Ioseph sayde: This is the interpretacio: The thre braunches are thre dayes, and ouer thre dayes shall Pharao take the, and putt the in thine office agayne, that thou mayest geuc him the cuppe in his hande after the olde maner, whia thou wast his butlar. But whan thou art in thy prosperite, thynie ypon me, and shewe me kyndnesse, that thou mayest certifie Pharao of me, $\dot{y}$ he maie bringe me out of this house: for I was preuely caried out of the lande of the Hebrues, and here also haue I done nothinge, that they shulde hane put me in this dongeon.

Whan the chefe baker sawe, that the interpretacion was good, he sayde mnto loseph: I dreamed, that 1 bare thre wyker baskettes rpon my heade, and in $\dot{y}$ vppermost baszket all maner of bakē meates vito Pharao, and the forles ate out of the baszket poon my heade.
loseph answered, and saycle: This is the interpretacion: The thre baszkettes are thre dayes, and after thre dayes shall Pharao take the, and hange the vpon the galowe, and the foules shal eate thy flesh from of $\dot{y}$.

And vpon the thirde daye it came to passe, that Pharao helde his * byrth daye, and made a feast vnto all his seruaumtes, and toke the chefe butlar and the chefe baker before all his seruauntes, and restored the chefe butlar to his butlarshipe agayne, so that he reached the cuppe in to Pharaos hande. As for the chefe baker, he caused him be hanged like as Ioseph had interpretated vnto him. Neuerthelesse the chefe butlar thought not on Ioseph, but forgat him.

${ }^{\mathfrak{a}}$ A ND after two yeares Pharao had a dreame, how that he stode by a water syde: and beholde, out of the water there came senen goodly kyne, and fatfleshed, and wente fedinge in the medowe. After these he sawe other seuen kyne come out of the water, which were euell fauoured and leane fleshed, and wente by the kyne vpon $\mathfrak{y}$ water syde: and the euell fauoured leene kyue ate ip the seuen goodly and fatt kyne. Then Pharao awaked.

And he slepte agayne, and dreamed the seconde tyme. And he sawe that seuen eares of corne grewe vpon one stalke, full and good. Afterwarde he sawe seuē thynne and blasted eares come $\mathrm{r}_{\mathrm{p}}$, and the seuen thyme eares denomed the seuen greate and full eares. Then Pharao awaked, and sawe that it was a dreame. And whan it was daye, his sprete was troubled, and he sente out, a caused to [^64]call all the soythsayers in Egipte $\tau$ all the wyse men, and tolle them his dreame. But there was none, that coulde tell Pharao the interpretacion of it.

Then spake the chefe butlar unto Pharao,玉 and saide: This daye do I renembre my fawte. Whan Pharao was angrie with his seruauntes, and put me in preson with $\hat{y}$ chefe baker in $\dot{y}$ chefe marshals house, we dreamed both in one night euery mā his dreame, hauinge his owne interpretacion. Then was there with rs a yonge man an Hebrue, the chefe marshals seruaunt, vnto whom we tolde it, and he declared oure dreames vito rs, vnto euery mā acordinge to his dreame. And as he declared it vito rs, so came it to passe. For I was restored vito myne office, and he was hanged.
Then Pharao sent and called for Ioseph and they let him out of the dongeon. And he let himself be shauen, and chaunged his clothes, and came in vnto Pharao. Then saide Pharao vnto him: I haue dreamed a dreame, and there is no man that can interprete it: but I haue herde tell of the, that whà thou hearest a dreame, thou declarest it. loseph answered Pharao, and sayde: God shall geue Pharao a prosperous answere, yee well without me.
Pharao sayde mono Ioseph: I dreamed that I stode by a water syde, and beholde, out of the water there came seuen kyne, fatfleshed and goodly, and wente fedinge in $\dot{y}$ medowe. And after them I sawe other seuē kyne come out, thyme, euell fauoured, and leenfleshed. So cuell fauoured sawe 1 neuer in all the lande of Egipte. And the seuen leene and euell fauoured kyne, ate vp the seuen first fat kyne. And whan they had eate them vp , a man coude not perceaue that they had eaten them, a were as eucll fauoured as they were afore. Then I awaked.

And I sawe agayne in my dreame seuen eares of corne, growinge vpö one stalke, full and good. Afterwarde there spronge up seuen wythred eares, thyme and blasted, and the seuen thynne eares deuoured the senen good eares. And I haue shewed it monto my soithsayers, but they can tell me nothinge therof.
Ioseph answered Pharao: Both Pharaos dreames are one. God sheweth Pharao what he wil do. The seuen good kyne are senen yeares, and the seuen good eares are senen yeares also. It is one dreame. The seuen leene and euell fauoured kyne, that came vp after them, are seuen yeares. And the seuen thynne and blasted eares, shalbe seuen yeares of derth. This is now the thinge which I tolde Pharao, that God sheweth Pharao, what he wyll do.

Beholde, there shal come seuen yeares with greate plenteousnes in $\mathfrak{y}$ whole lande of Egipte, and after the same there shall come seuen yeares of derth, so that all this plenteonsnes shalbe forgotten in y lande of Egipte: and the derth shall consume the lande, so that the plenteousnes shal not be perceaued in the lande, because of the derth that commeth therafter, for it shall be very greate. Where as Pharao dreamed the seconde tyme, it signifieth that this thinge is surely prepared of God, and that God wil shortly brynge the same to passe.
Let Pharao now prouyde for a man of vnderstondinge a wyszdome, whom he maye set ouer the lande of Egipte, and se that he ordene officers in the londe, and take $\hat{y}$ fifth (parte) of the lande of Egipte in the senen plenteous yeares, and gather all $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ foode $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ shal come of the plenteous yeares, that they maye laye vp corne vnder Pharaos power for sustenaunce in the cities, and kepe it, $\frac{t}{y}$ there maye be foode founde prepared for the lande in the senen deare yeares, which shall come vpon the lande of Egipte, that the lande be not destroyed of honger. The sayenge pleased Pharao well and all his seruantes. And Pharao sayde vnto his seruauntes: How might we fynde soch a man, in whom is the sprete of God? And sayde vnto losep: For so moch as God hath shewed $\hat{y}$ all this, there is none of soch vaderstondinge a wyszdome as thou.

Thou shalt be ouer my house, and acordinge vnto thy worde ${ }^{a}$ shall all my people obeye: onely in the kynges seate wyll 1 be more then thou. And he sayde: Beholde, I haue set the ouer the whole lande of Egipte. And he toke of his ringe from his häde, and gaue it Ioseph in his hāde, and clothed him with whyte sylke, and honge a cheyne of golde aboute his neck, and made him ryde vpo the seconde charet: and caused it be proclaned before him, that men shulde bowe their knees [^65]vnto him, as to him whō Pharao had set ouer the whole lande of Egipte.

And Pharao sayde vnto Ioseph: I am Pharao: without thy wyll shall no man moue his hande or his fote in all the lāde Egipte. And he called him * Zaphoth Paena, a gaue him a wife, euen Asnath the doughter of Potiphar the prest of On. So Ioseph wente out, for to vyset the lande of Egipte. (And he was thirtie yeare olde, whan he stode before Pharao.) And he departed from Pharao, and wente thorow all the lande of Egipte.

And the londe dyd so those seuen plenteous yeares, and they gathered all the foode of the seuen yeares that were in the lande of Egipte, $\tau$ layed it in the cities. Loke what foode grewe in the felde rounde aboute euery cite, they put it therin. So loseph layed vp the corne in stoare, and that moch aboue measure, as the sonde of the see: in so moch ${ }^{t}$ he left of nombrynge of it, for it coude not be nombred.
${ }^{6}$ And unto Ioseph there were borne two somnes (before y derth came) whom Asnath the doughter of Potiphar prest of On bare vnto him. And the first called he Manasses: for God (sayde he) hath caused me to forget all my laboure, and all my fathers house. The seconde called he Ephrain: for God (sayde he) hath cansed me to growe in y lande of my trouble.

Now whan ${ }^{\circ}$ seuen plenteous yeares were ended in Egipte, then begame the seuen deare yeares to come, 'wherof loseph had sayde. And there was derth in all landes, but in all the lade of Egipte there was foode. Now whan the lande of Egipte beganne to suffre honger also, the people cryed vnto Pharao for bred. But Pharao sayde vito all y Egipcians: Go vnto Ioseph, what he sayeth vinto you, $\stackrel{t}{y}^{\text {d }}$ doo. So whan there was derth in all y lide, loseph opened all $\frac{t}{y}$ was by him, a solde mito the Egipcians. 'Thus y ' derth preuayled in the lande, a all countrees came to Egipte to bye at Ioseph: for the derth was mightie in all landes.

 HAN lacob sawe that there was moch corne in Egipte, he sayde vnto his sonnes: Why gape ye? Beholde, I heare thatsecrete thiges are opened. ${ }^{\circ}$ Gen. 46. c. ${ }^{\text {© Act. 7. b. }}$
|there is moch corne in Egipte, go downe It bye vs corne, ${ }^{\text {y }}$ we maie lyue, a not dye. So Iosephs ten brethre wente downe to bye come in Egipte. As for Ben Jamyn Iosephs brother, Iacob wolde not let him go with his brethré, for he sayde: Some mysfortune might happen vnto him. So $\hat{y}$ childrē of Israel came to bye corne, amonge other $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ came with them: for there was derth also in $\hat{y}$ lande of Canaan. But Ioseph was gouernoure in the lande, and solde corne vnto all the people in the lande.

Now wha his brethre came to him, they fell downe to the grounde before him von their faces. And he sawe them, a knewe thē, and helde him self straunge towarde them, and talked roughly with them, and saide vnto them: Whence come ye? They sayde: Out of the lande of Canaan to bye rytayle. Neuertheles though he knewe them, yet knewe they not him. And Ioseph thought vpon $\dot{y}$ dreames that he had dreaned of them, ${ }^{a}$ and sayde vnto them: Ye are spyes, and are come to se where the lande is open.

They answered him: No my lorde, thy seruauntes are come to bye vytayle: we are all one mans somes, we are rnfayned, and thy seruauntes were neuer spyes. He sayde mito thè: No, but ye are come to se where the lande is open. They answered him: We thy seruauntes are twolue brethren, the sonnes of one man in the lade of Canaan, and the yongest is with oure father: as for one, he is awaye.

Ioseph sayde vnto them: This is it that I sayde vnto you: spyes are ye. Here by wyll I prone you: By the life of Pharao ye shall not get hence, excepte youre yongest brother come hither. Sende awaye one of you to fetch youre brother, but ye shalbe in preson. Thus wyll I trye out youre wordes, whether ye go aboute with trueth or not: for els, by the life of Pharao ye are spyes. And he put the together in warde thre dayes longe.

V'pon the thirde daye he sayde vnto the: Yf ye wil lyue, the do thus, for I feare God: If ye be vinfayned, let one of youre brethren lye bonnde in youre preson: but go ye youre waye, and cary home the necessary foode, $\pi$ brynge me youre yongest brother, so wyll I belene youre wordes, that ye shall not dye. And so they dyd.

And they sayde one to another: This have we deserued against oure brother, in that we sawe the anguysh of his soule, whan he besought vs, and we wolde not heare him: therfore cometh now this trouble vpon vs. Ruben answered them, and saide: Tolde not I you y same, whan I sayde:* $O$ synne not agaynst $\mathfrak{y}$ lad, but ye wolde not heare. Now is his bloude requyred. But they knew not that Ioseph voderstode it, for he spake vnto the by an interpreter. And he turned him from them, and wepte. Now whan he had turned him to them agayne, and talked with them, he toke Symon from amonge them, a bounde him before their eyes, and commaunded to fyll their sackes with corne, and to put euery mans money in his sack, and to geue euery one his expenses by the waye. And so was it done vnto them.

And they laded their corne vpon their Asses, and departed thence. But whan one opened his sacke to geue his Asse prouender in the Inne, he spyed his money in his sack mouth, and sayde rnto his brethren: My money is restored me agayne: lo, it is in my sack. Then their hertes fayled them, and they were afrayed amonge them selues, and sayde: Wherfore hath God done this vnto us?

Now whan they came home to Iacob their father in the lade of Canaan, they tolde him all that had happened vnto them, $\tau$ sayde: The man that is lorde of the londe, spake roughly to vs, and toke vs for spyes of the countre. And whan we answered: we are ynfayned, a were neuer spyes, but are twolue brethren the somes of oure father: one is awaye, and the yongest is yet this daye with oure father in the lande of Canaan, He sayde: Hereby wyl I marke, that ye are mfayned: Leaue one of youre brethren with me, a take foode necessary for youre houses, a go youre waye, and bryige youre yongest brother snto me: so shal I knowe that ye are no spyes, but vnfayned: the shal I delyuer you youre brother also, and ye maye occupie in the lande.

And whan they opened their sackes, euery man founde his boundell of money in his sacke. And whā they and their father sawe, that it was the bundels of their money, they were afrayed.

Then sayde Iacob their father: Ye haue robbed me of my children. Ioseph is awaye, [^66]Simeon is awaye, and ye will take Ben Iamin awaye: It goeth all ouer me. Ruben answered his father a sayde: Yf I brynge him not to the againe, then slaye my two somes: delyuer him but in to my hande, I wyl brynge him agayne ruto the. He sayde: my sonne shal not go downe with you: for his brother is deed, and he is left alone. Yf eny mysfortune shulde happen vnto him by the waye $\frac{t}{y}$ ye go, ye shulde bringe my graye hayre with sorowe downe vnto the graue.

さi) rliii. Chapter.

${ }^{8}$ BUT the derth oppressed $\dot{y}$ lande. And whan all the vytales that they had brought out of Egipte were spent, Iacob their father sayde vito them: Go agayne, and bye vs a litle foode.

The Iuda answered him, and sayde: The man sware vnto vs, and sayde: ye shal not se my face, excepte youre brother be with you. Yf so be now that thou wilt sende oure brother with vs, we wil go downe, and bye the foode. But yf thou wilt not sende him, we wgl not go downe. For the man sayde vnto vs: Ye shal not se my face, excepte youre brother be with you.
Israel sayde: Wherfore haue ye done this euell vnto me, to tell $\frac{8}{y}$ man, that ye had yet a brother? They answered: The man enquered so strately of vs and of oure kynrede, a sayde: Is youre father yet a lyue? Haue ye yet a brother? Then tolde we him, as he axed vs. How coulde we knowe, that he wolde saye: brynge youre brother downe with you? Then sayde Iuda vito Israel his father: Let the lad go with me, that we maye get rs vp and take oure iourney, and lyue, and not dye, both we and thou, and oure childré. *I wyll be suertye for him, of my handes shalt thou requyre him. If I brynge him not vato the agayne, a set him before thine eyes, I wil beare y blame my life longe. For yf we had not made this tarienge, we had now bene come agayne twyse.

Then sayde Israel their father vito the: Yf it must nedes be so, then do this: take of the best frutes of the lande in youre sackes, and brynge the man a present: a curtesy balme, and hony, and spyces, and myrre, and dates, and almondes. Take other money with you also, and the money that was brought agayne in your sacke mouthes, cary it agayne with you: peraduenture it was an ouersight. And take youre brother, get you vp, a go agayne vnto the man. The Allmightie God geue you mercy in the sight of $y$ man, that he maye let you hane youre other brother, and Ben Iamin. As for me, I must be as one, that is robbed of his children.

Then they toke the present, and other money with them, and Ben Iamin, gat the vp , and wente in to Egipte, and stode before Ioseph. Then Ioseph behelde them with Ben Iamin, and sayde vnto the ruler of his house: Bringe these men in, and sley, a make ready, for they shal dyne with me at noone. And the man dyd as Ioseph bad him, a brought the men in to Iosephs house.

Whan they were brought in to Iosephs house, they were afrayed, and sayde: We are brought hither because of the money, that came agayne in oure sackes at the first, to pyke a quarell with vs, and to laye somethinge to oure charge, and to take vs for bonde sernauntes with oure Asses.

Therfore came they to ${ }^{\circ}$ man, that was ruler of Iosephs house, and talked with him at the doore, and sayde: Syr, t we came downe at the first to bye foode, and whan we came in the Inne, and opened oure sackes, beholde, euery mans money was in his sack mouth with full weight: therfore haue we brought it with rs agayne, a haue brought other money with vs also, to bye foode: but we can not tell, who put oure money in oure sackes.

He sayde: Be content, feare you not, youre God euen $\dot{y}$ God of youre fathers hath gene yon ${ }^{t}$ treasure in youre sackes, I had youre money. And he brought forth Simeon vnto them, and led them in to Iosephs honse, and gaue them water to wash their fete, a gaue their Asses prouender. Ioseph came at noone: for they herde, $\dot{y}$ they shulde dyne there. Now whan Ioseph wente in to the house, they brought him home $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ present that they had, and fell downe to the grounde before him. But he welcomed them curteously, and sayde: Is youre father (that olde man which ye tolde me of, ) in good health? Is be yet alyue? They answered: Thy seruaunt oure father is in good health, and is yet alyue. And they bowed them sehues, and fell downe before him.

And they made readye ${ }^{\circ}$ present, ageynst

And he lift up his eyes, and sawe his brother Ben Iamin his mothers sonne, and saide: * Is this youre yongest brother, that ye tolde me of? And he sayde morouer: Gol be mereifull whto the my some. And Ioseph made haist (for ${ }^{a}$ the grounde of his hert was kyndled towarde his brother) and sought how he might wepe, © wente in to his chamber, and wepte there.

And whan he had washed his face, he wente out, and refrayned him self, and sayde: set bred (on the table.) And they brought vnto him by him self, and vnto them by the selues, and to the Egipeians also that ate with them, by them selues. (For the Egipeians darre not eate bred with the Ebrues, that is an abhominacion vito them.) And they were set ouer agaynst him, the first borne acordinge to his first byrth, and the yongest after his youth. They marueled at it amonge them selues, and there were brought them sundrye meates from his table. But Ben Iamins parte was fyue tymes more then the other. And they dronke, and were mery with him.

AND loseph commaunded the ruler of his house, and sayde: Fyll the mens saekes with foode, as moch as they maye earye, and put euery mans money in his sacke mouth, a put my syluer euppe in the saek mouth of the yongest with the money for $\frac{g}{y}$ vytayles. He dyd as loseph had sayde. And on the morow whan it was daye, they let $\dot{y}$ men go with their Asses.

But whan they were out of the eite, and not come farre, Ioseph sayde to the ruler of his house: Yp, and lolowe after the mé, and whan thou ouertakest them, saie wito them : Wherfore hane ye rewarded euell for good? Is not that it, that my lorde drynketh out of? and that he prophecieth withall? It is euell done of you, that ye haue done.

1) And whan he had onertaken them, he sayde the same wordes vnto them. 'They answered him: Wherfore saieth my lorde soch worles? God forbyd, that thy sermamtes shulde do eny soch thinge? Beholde, the money that we fonde in oure sackes monthes, that brought we vuto the agayne, out of the lande of Canaan: how shulde we then have stollen either syluer or golde out of thy lordes house? Loke by whom it shall be founde amonge thy seruauntes, let him dye : yee and we also wyll be my lordes bondmen. He sayde: let it so be, as ye haue spoken. Loke by whom it shall be founde, let him be my seruaunt, but ye shalbe harmlesse.

And they made haist, and toke downe euery man his sack to the grounde, and euery man opened his sack: And he searehed a beganne at the greatest rnto the yongest, and the cuppe was founde in Ben Jamins sacke. Then rente they their elothes, and enery man lade the burthen rpon his Asse, to wente agavne vnto the eite. And Iuda wente with his bretliren wnto Iosephs house (for he was there yet) and they fell before him on the gronde. Ioseph sayde vnto them: What maner of dede is this, that ye haue done? Knewe ye not, that soeh a man as I am, ean prophecr: ?

Iuda sayde: What shall we saye vinto my lorde? or how shal we speake? and what excuse shal we make? God hath founde out $\mathfrak{y}$ wickeduesse of thy seruauntes. Beholde, we and he, by whom the cuppe is founde, are my lordes seruauntes. But he sayde: God forbyd that I shulde do so. The man by whom the cuppe is founde, shall be my seruaunt, but go ye up in peace sinto youre father.

Thē stepte Iuda voto him, and sayde: My lorde, let thy sermaunt speake one worde in thine eares my lorde, be not displesed at thy seruaunt also, for thou art ene as Pharao. My lorde axed his seruauntes, and sayde: Haue ye yet a father or brother? Then answered we: We have a father, which is olde, and a yonge lad begotten in his age, and his brother is deed, at he is left alone of his mother, and bis father loueth him.

Then saydest thou: Brynge him downe 3 vuto me, and 1 wil se him. But we answered iny lorde: The lad can not come from his father, yf he shulde come from him, he were but a deed man. Then saydest thou vito thy seruauntes: ${ }^{b}$ If youre yongest brother come not hither with you, ye shall se my face nomore. 'Then wente we rp vato thy seruaunt my father, and tolde him my lordes wordes. Then saycle oure father: Go youre waye agayne, and bye vs a litle foode. But we [^67]sayde: We ean not go downe, excepte oure yongest brother be with vs, then wyll we go downe: for we darre not loke the man in the face, yf oure yongest brother be not with vs. Then sayde thy seruaunt my father vato vs: Ye knowe that my wife bare me two sonnes, one wente out fro me, and I sayde: he is torne in peces. "Yf ye take this fro me also, and eny mysfortune happē him, then shal ye ${ }^{b}$ brynge my gray heer with sorowe downe vnto the graue.

If I now come home vato my father, a the lad be not with me (seynge his soule hangeth by the soule of this) then shall it come to passe, that yf he se not the lad there, he shal dye. So shal we thy seruauntes brynge the gray heer of thy seruaunt oure father with sorowe downe to the graue. For I thy seruaunt 'became suertye for the lad vito my father, and sayde: yf I brynge him not agayne, I will beare the blame all my lyfe longe. Therfore let thy seruaunt byde here in steade of $\hat{y}$ lad, to be my lordes bonde man, and let the lad go vp with his brethren. For how can I go vp mito my father, yf the lad be not with me? Then shulde I se the mysery that shulde happen voto my father.

THEN coude not loseph refrayne him self before all them that stode aboute him: and he comaunded enery man to go out from him, and there stode no man by him, whan loseph vttred him self vnto his brethren. And he wepte loude, so that y Egipcians and Pharaos housholde herde it. ${ }^{d}$ And he sayde vnto his brethren: I an Ioseph, is my father yet alyue? And his brethren coulde not answere him, they were so abashed before his face. But he sayde: Come nye vnto me. And they came nye. And he sayde: I am loseph youre brother, * whom ye solde in to Egipte. And now vexe not youre selues, a thinke not $\frac{t}{y}$ there is eny wrath, because ye solde me hither. + For God sent me hither before you, for youre lyues sake. For these are now two yeares, that y derth hath bene in the lande, and there are yet fyue yeares behynde, wherin there shalbe no plowinge ner haruest.
|saue youre lyues by a greate delyueraunce. And now, it was not ye then that sent me hither, but God which hath made me a father vnto Pharao, a lorde ouer all his house, and a prynce in the whole lande of Egripte. Haist you therfore, and go vp wnto my father, and saye vnto him: Thy soune Ioseph sendeth the this worde: God hath made me lorde in all Egipte, come downe vinto me, tarye not, thou shalt dwel in the lande of Gosen, and be with me: thou and thy children, and thy childers chitdrē, thy small and greate catell, and all that thou hast. There wyll I make prouysion for the (for there are yet fyue yeares of derth) that thou perishe not with thine house, and all that is thyne. Beholde, youre eyes and the eyes of my brother Ben lamin se, that I myne owne self speake vato you by mouth. Shewe my father all my worshipe in Egipte, and all that ye haue sene: haist you, and come downe hither with my father.

And he fell aboute his brother Ben Iamyns neek, and wepte, and Ben Iamin wepte yon his neek also. And he kyssed all his brethren, and wepte ypon them. And afterwarde talked his brethren with him. And this tydinges came in to Pharaos house: Iosephs brethren are come, which pleased Pharao well, and all his seruauntes.

And Pharao spake vnto Ioseph: Saye vnto thy brethren: Do thus, lade youre beastes, go youre waye, and whan ye come in to the lande of Canaan, take youre father and youre housholdes, and come monto me, I wyl geue yon of the goodes in the lade of Egipte, so that ye shall eate the fatt in the lande. And he commaunded them, Do thus, Take you charettes out of $y$ lande of Egipte for youre chitdren and wyues, and brynge youre father, and come, and regarde not youre housholde stuff: for the goodes of all the lade of Egipte shalbe yours.

The children of Israel dyd so, and Ioseph gaue the charettes acordynge to Pharaos commaundement, and expenses by the waye, and gane them all, unto euery one a chaunge of rayment: but vito Ben Iamin he gate thre hundreth syluer pens, and fyue chaunge of rayment. As for his father, he sent him ten Asses laden with goodes out of Egipte, and ten Asses with corne and bred, and vytayles for his father by $\dot{y}$ waye. So he sent awaye [^68]his brethren, and sayde vinto them: Stryue not by the waye.

2 Thus they departed out of Egipte, and came to the lande of Canaan unto Jacob their father, and tolde him, and sayde: 'Thy some Ioseph is yet alyue, and is a lorde in all the lande of Egipte. But his hert wauered, for he beleued them not. The tolde they him all the wordes of loseph, which he had sayde vnto them. And whan he sawe $\mathfrak{y}$ charettes that Ioseph had sent to fetch him, his sprete reuyued, a he sayde: I haue ynough, that my sonne Ioseph is yet a liue I wil go, and se him, before I dye.

And Ioseph shal laye his hande vpon thine eyes.Then Iacob gat him vp from Berseba, and ${ }_{y}^{\circ}$ children of Israel caried lacob their father with their children and wyues vpon the charettes that Pharao had sent to cary him. And they toke their catell $\mathbb{a}$ substaunce which they had gotten in the lande of Canaan, and so came in to Egipte: * Iacob $\pi$ all his sede with him, his children © his childers children with him, his doughters, and the doughters of his children, a all his sede.

These are $\hat{y}$ names of the children of Israel, which came in to Egipte, Iacob a his sonnes. t The first borne sonne of Iacob: Ruben. The children of Ruben: Hanoch, Pallu, Hezron and Chami. ${ }^{b}$ The children of simeon: Iemuel, Iamin, Ohad, Iachim, Zohar and Saul the sonne of the Cananitish woman. The childrē of Leui: Gerson, Cahath t Merari. The childré of Iuda: Er, Ouan, Sela, Phares a Serah. But Er and Onan dyed in the lande of Canaan. The childre of Phares: Hesron and Hamul. The children of Isachar: 'Thola, Phua, Iob a Semron. The children of Zabulon: Sered.

[^69]Elon and Iahleel. These are the childrē of Lea, which she bare vnto Iacob in Mesopotamia with his donghter Dina. These all together with sonnes a doughters make thre a thirtie soules.

The childrè of Gad: Zipheon, Haggi, Suni, Ezbon, Eri, Arodi and Areli. The children of Asser: Iemna, lesua, Iesui, Bria a Sera their sister. The children of Bria: Heber and Malchiel. These are the children of Silpa, $\ddagger$ whom Laban gaue vnto Lea his doughter, and she bare rnto lacob these sistene soules.

The childree of Rachel Iacobs wife: Ioseph and Ben Iamin. And monto loseph in $y$ lande of Egipte $\uparrow$ were borne Manasses and Ephraim, whom Asnath the doughter of Potiphar prest of On bare vnto him. The children of Ben lamin: Bela, Becher, Asber, Gera, Naamā, Ehi, Ros, Mupim, Hupim and Ard. These are the children of Rachel, which were borne vito Iacob, fourtene soules alltogether.

The children of Dan: Husim. The childre of Nephtali: lahzeel, Guni, Iezer, Sillem. These are the children of Bilha, whom Laban gave rnto his doughter Rachel, a she bare Iacob these seuen soules. All the soules $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ came with lacob in to Egipte, ${ }^{d}$ which proceaded out of his loynes (besyde the wyues of his childrē) are alltogether sixe a sixtie soules. And losephs childre which were borne vnto him in Egipte, were two soules: so that all the soules of the house of Iacob which came in to Egipte, were seuentye.

And he sent luda before him vnto Ioseph, to shew him the waye to Gosen, $\pi$ they came in to the lande of Gosen. Then Ioseph bended his charett fast, and wente vp to mete Israel his father unto Gosen. And whan he sawe him, he fell aboute his neck, a wepte sore upon his neck. Then sayde Israel wnto Ioseph: Now am I content to dye, for so moch as I haue sene thy face, that thou art yet alyue.

Ioseph sayde rnto his brethren, $\pi$ to his $玉$ fathers house: I will go tp, a tell Pharao, a saye rnto him: My brethrē and my fathers house are come vito me out of the lande of Canaan, and are kepers of catell (for they are men that deale with catell:) their small a greate catell, and all that they haue, haue they brought with them. Now yf Pharao call [^70]you, and saye: what is youre occupacio? then ye shal saye: Thy seruauntes are men $\frac{t}{y}$ haue dealt with catell from oure youth vp hytherto, both we a oure fathers, that ye maye dwell in the lande of Gosen : for the Egipcians abhorre all kepers of catell.

${ }^{a}$ THEN came Ioseph, and tolde Pharao a sayde: My father and my brethren, their small $\mathbb{\leftrightarrows}$ greate catell, $\underset{\text { a }}{ }$ all $\frac{t}{y}$ they haue, are come out of $\dot{y}$ lande of Canaan : © beholde, they are in the lande of Gosen. And he toke fyue of his brethren, a presented them vito Pharao. Then sayde Pharao vnto his brethren: What is youre occupacion? They answered: Thy seruauntes are kepers of catell, we and oure fathers also. And they sayde morouer vnto Pharao: We are come to dwell with you in the lande, for thy seruautes haue no pasture for their catell, so sore doth the derth oppresse the lande of Canaan. Now therfore let thy seruauntes dwell in the lande of Gosen. thy brethren are come vnto the: the lande of Egipte is open before the, let them dwell in the best place of the lande, a se $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ they dwell euen in the lande of Gosen. And yf thou knowest that there be men of actiuyte amoge thē, make the rulers of my catell.

Ioseph brought in Iacob his father also, a set him before Pharao. And Iacob thanked Pharao. But Pharao axed Iacob: How olde art thou? Iacob sayde: The tyme of my *pylgremage is an hüdreth and thirtie yeares: litle and euell is the tyme of my pilgremage, and attayneth not vnto the tyme of my fathers in their pylgremages. And Iacob thanked Pharao, and wēte out from him.

So Ioseph prepared dwellinges for his father and his brethren, a gaue them a possession in the lande of Egipte, euen in the best place of the lande, namely, in the lande of Raemses, as Pharao comaunded. And he made prouysion for his father and his brethren, and all his fathers house with bred, euen as yonge children.

There was no bred in all the londe, for the derth was very sore: so $\frac{\dot{y}}{}$ the lande of Egipte $\pi$ the lande of Canaan were fameshed by y reason of the derth. And Ioseph brought together all the money that was founde in Egipte and Canaan, for $\stackrel{\ominus}{\mathrm{y}}$ corne that they bought. And he layed vp all the money in Pharaos house.

* Iob 14. c. Psal. 118. c.

Now whan money fayled in the lande of Egipte and Canaan, all the Egipcians came vnto Ioseph, a saide: Geue vs bred. Why suffrest thou vs to dye before $\dot{y}$, because we are without money? Ioseph saide: Brynge hither youre catell, so wil I geue you for youre catell, seynge ye are without money. Then brought they their catell vnto Ioseph. And he gaue thè bred for their horses, shepe, oxen and Asses. So he fed them with bred y yeare, for all their catell.

Whan $\frac{t}{y}$ yeare was ended, they came vnto him the next yeare, a sayde vnto him: We wil not hyde it from oure lorde, $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{t}}$ not onely the money, but all the catell also is spent vnto oure lorde: os there is nothinge left more for oure lorde, but onely oure body $\leftrightarrows$ oure lande. Wherfore suffrest thou both vs to dye, and oure londe? 'Take vs and oure lāde for bred, that we and oure lande maye be bonde ruto Pharao: geue vs sede, that we maye lyue and not dye, $5 \frac{t}{y}$ the lande become not a wildernesse.

So Ioseph toke all the lande of Egipte in for Pharao: for the Egipcians solde euery man his lande, because $y$ derth was so mightie vpon them : and so the lode became Pharaos, with the people that wente out and in at his cities, from one syde of Egipte vito the other, excepte the prestes londe, that toke he not in: For it was ordened of Pharao for the prestes, that they shulde eate that which was appoynted them, which he gaue them, therfore they neded not to sell their londes.

Then sayde Ioseph vnto the people: Beholde, I haue taken possession of you and youre lande this daye for Pharao, Beholde, there haue ye sede, sowe the londe, and of the corne ye shall geue the fifth parte vnto Pharao: foure partes shalbe youres, to sowe the londe for youre sustenaunce, and for youre houses and children.

They sayde: Let vs but lyue, a fynde grace before the oure lorde, we wyl gladly be Pharaos seruauntes: So Ioseph made the a lawe vnto this daye ouer the Egipcians londe, to geue Pharao the fifth parte, excepte the prestes londe, which was not bonde vnto Pharao.
(a) So Israel dwelt in Egipte in the londe of Gosen, and had it in possession, and grew and multiplied exceadingly. And lacob lyued senentene yeare in the lande of Egipte, so that his whole age was an hūdreth and seuen and fourtye yeares.

Now whan the tyme came that lsrael shulde dye, he called loseph his some, and sayde vnto him: Yf I haue founde grace in thy sight, *then laye thine honde vader my thye, $\frac{t}{y}$ thou shalt shewe mercy and faithfulnes ypon me, and not burye me in Egipte, but I will lye by my fathers, and thon shalt carye me out of Egipte, I burye me in their burgall. He sayde: I wil do as thou hast sayde. But he sayde: $\dagger$ Then sweare vnto me. And he sware vnto him. The Israel bowed himself towarde the ber heade.

${ }^{3}$ T${ }^{\top}$ HESE are $\dot{y}$ names of the ${ }^{a}$ childre of Israel, that came with Iacob in to Egipte: euery one came in with his house, Ruben, Simeon, Leui, Iuda, Isachar, Zabulō, Ben Iamin, Dan, Nephtali, Gad and Aser. And of all the soules that came out of the loynes of Iacob, there were seuentie.

As for loseph, he was in Egipte all ready. Now whà Ioseph was deed, and all his brethren, and all they that lyued at that tyme, the children of Israel grewe, ${ }^{b}$ and increased, and multiplied, and became exceadinge mightic, so $\frac{t}{y}$ the lande was full of them.

The came there a new kynge ouer Egipte, which knewe nothinge of Ioseph, and sayde vnto his people: Beholde, the people of the children of Israel are many, mightier then we: Yp, let vs deale wysely with them, $\dot{y}$ there be not so many of them. For yf there shulde ryse vp eny warre agaynst vs, they might ioyne them selues also vinto oure enemies, and ouercome vs, 3 so get them out of the lande.

And he set worke masters ouer them, to kepe them vnder with burthens. (For they buylded the cities Phiton and Raemses, for treasuries vnto Pharao.) But the more they vexed them, the more they multiplied and grew.

Therfore had they indignacio at the children of Israel, and the Egipcians compelled the children of Israel without mercy to do seruyce, and made their lyues bytter vnto them with greuous laboure in claye and brycke, and with allmaner of bondage in y felde, and with allmaner of laboure, which they layed vpon them without merey.

And the kynge of Egipte sayde vito the mydwyues of the Hebrueswemen. (Of the which one was called Siphra, and the other Pua:) Whan ye helpe the wemen of the Hebrues, and se vpon the stole, that it is a sonne, then slaye bim: but yf it be a doughter, let her lyue. Neuertheles the mydwyues feared God, a dyd not as the kinge of Egipte commaunded them, but let the children lyue.

Then the kynge of Egipte called the mydwyues, and sayde vnto them: Wherfore do ye this, that ye let the children lyue? The mydwyues answered Pharao: The wemen of the Hebrues are not as the wemen of Egipte, ${ }^{\circ}$ Gen. 46. b. ${ }^{\circ}$ Psal. 104. c. Act. 7. c. *Psalmo for they are sturdy wemen : or euer the mydwyues come at them, they are delyuered.

Therfore God dealt well with the mydwyues. And the people multiplied, and became exceadinge mightic. And for so moch as the mydwyues feared God, * he made them houses. Then Pharao commaūded all his people and sayde: All the sonnes that are borne, cast in to the water, but let all the doughters lyue.

©he ij. Chapter.

AND there wente forth a man of the honse of Leui, ${ }^{c}$ and toke a doughter of Leui. + And the wife conceaued and bare a sonne. And whan she sawe $\frac{t}{y}$ it was a proper childe, she hyd him thre monethes. And whan she coude hyde him no longer, she toke an Arke of redes, and dawbed it ouer with slyme and pitch, and layed the childe therin, and set it amonge the redes by the waters brynke. But his sister stode a farre of, to wete what wolde come of him.

And Pharaos doughter came downe, to wash herself in the water: And hir maydens walked by the water syde: and whan she sawe the Arke amonge the redes, she sent one of hir maydens, and caused it to be fett. And whan she opened it, she sawe $\dot{y}$ childe: and beholde the babe wepte. Then had she pytie vpon it, and sayde: It is one of the Hebrues children.

Then sayde his syster vnto Pharaos doughter: Shal I go, and call the a nurse of the Hebrues wemen, to nurse $\dot{f}$ the childe? Pharaos doughter sayde mito her: Go thy waye. The mayde wente, and called the childes mother. Then sayde Pharaos doughter vnto her: Take this childe, and nurse it for me, I wyll geue $\dot{f}$ thy rewarde. The woman toke the childe, and nursed it.

And whan the childe was growne, she brought it vnto Pharaos doughter, and it became hir sonne, and she called him Moses. For she sayde: I toke him out of the water.

Vpon a tyme whan Moses was greate, he wente forth vato his brethren, and loked ypon their burthens, and sawe, that an Egipciā smote one of his brethren $\mathfrak{y}$ Hebrues. And he loked rounde aboute him: and whan he sawe that there was no man, he slew the Egipeian, and buried him in the sonde.
126. a. $\quad$ Exod. o. c. + Act. 7. c. Heb. 11. d.

The next daye he wente forth also, and sawe two men of the Hebrues stryuynge together, and sayde to the ungodly : Wherfire smytest thou thy neghboure? But he sayde:* Who made the a ruler or iudge oner vs? Wilt thou slaye me also, as thou slewest the Egipcian? The was lloses afrayed, and sayde: How is this knowne? And Pharao herde of it, and sought for Moses, to slaye him. But Moses fled from Pharao, and kepte him in the lande of Madian, and sat him downe by a wells syde.
The prest Madian had seuen doughters, which came to drawe water, and fylled the troughes, to geue their fathers shepe to drinke. Then came the shepherdes, and droue the awaye. But Mloses gat him vp, and helped them, and gaue their shepe to drynke. And whan they came to lieguel their father, he saide : How came ye so soone to daie? They sayde: A man of Egipte delyuered rs from $\hat{y}$ shepherdes, and drew vnto vs, and gaue the shepe to drynke. He sayde vnto his doughters: Where is he? Wherfore let ye the man go, that ye called him not to eate with vs?

And Moses was content to dwell with the man. And he gaue Moses his doughter Zipora, which bare him a sonne, and he ${ }^{\dagger}$ called him Gerson, for he sayde: I am become a straunger in a straunge lande. And she bare him yet a sonne, whon he called Elieser, and sayde: The God of my father is my helper, and hath delyuered me from Pharaos haide.

But alter this in processe of tyme, the kynge of Egipte dyed. And the childré of Israel sighed ouer their laboure, and cried. And their crye ouer their laboure, came before God. And God herde their cōplaynte, a remēbred his couenaunt $\ddagger$ with Abraham Isaac and lacob. And God loked vpon the childrē of lsrael, and God knew it.

Beholde, with the staff $\frac{t}{y}$ I haue in my hande, wil I smyte the water which is in $\frac{8}{y}$ ryuer, a it shal be turned in to bloude: so that the fishes in the ryuer shall dye, a the ryuer shall stynke: $\mathbb{c}$ it shall greue the Egipcians to drynke of $\dot{y}$ water of the ryuer.

And $\frac{f}{y}$ LORDE spake vnto Moses: Saye mnto Aaron: Take thy staff, at stretch out thine häde ouer ${ }^{\circ} \mathrm{y}$ waters of Egipte, ouer their ryuers a brokes a pondes, a ouer all water poles, $\frac{\dot{y}}{}$ they maye be turned to bloude, a that there naye be bloude in all $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ lande of Egipte, both in vessels of wodd and stone.
${ }^{d}$ Moses a Aaron dyd as $\dot{y}$ LORDE cōmaunded them, a lift vp the staff, a smote the water $\frac{t}{y}$ was in the ryuer, before Pharao th his seruauntes, a all the water in the ryuer was turned in to bloude, a the fysh in the ryuer dyed, the ryuer stanke, so $\frac{t}{y}$ the Egipcians coulde not drynke of the water of $\frac{y}{y}$ ryuer, a there was bloude in all the lande of Egipte. And the Sorcerers also of Egipte, dyd likewyse with their Sorceries. But Pharaos hert was hardened, a he herkened not vnto thē, like as the LORDE had sayde. And Pharao turned him self, a wente home, a set not his hert there on. All the Egipciās dygged rounde aboute $y$ ryuer, for water to drinke: for they coude not drynke of $\frac{8}{y}$ water out of the ryuer. And this endured seuen dayes longe, that the LORDE smote the ryuer.

THE LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Go thy waye to Pharao, a speake vnto him: Thus saieth the LORDE: Let my people go, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they maye serue me: Yf thou wilt not let the go, beholde, I wil smyte all y borders of thy lode with frogges, so $\frac{t}{y}$ the ryuer shal scraule with frogges: these shal clymme vp, a come in to thine house, in to thy chamber, where thou slepest, vpon thy bed, and in to the houses of thy seruanntes, amonge thy people, in to thine ouens, and vpon thy dowe: and the frogges shall come vp vpon the, and vpon thy people, and vpon all thy seruauntes.
${ }^{\prime}$ And the LORDE spake vnto Moses: Saie vnto Aaron: Stretch forth thine hande with [^81]|thy staff ouer the streames, © ryuers, a pondes, and let frogges come vpon the Ionde of Egipte. And Aaron stretched his hade ouer the waters in Egipte, a there came up frogges, so $\frac{t}{y}$ the Ionde of Egipte was couered.

The Sorcerers also dyd likewyse, with their Sorcerirs, a caused frogges to come rpō $\bar{y}$ lōde of Egipte. Thē called Pharao for Moses $\llbracket$ Aaron, $\mathbb{\pi}$ sayde: *Praye the LORDE for me, $\frac{t}{y}$ he maye take awaye the frogges fro me $\mathfrak{a}$ fro my people, a I will let $\dot{y}$ people go, $\dot{y}$ they mave do sacrifice mnto the LORDE.

Moses sayde: Haue thou the honoure before me, $\mathbb{t}$ appoynte me, whā I shal praye for $\dot{y}$, for thy seruauntes and for thy people: $\dot{y}$ the frogges maye be dryuen awaye frō the $\mathbb{t}$ fro thy house, © remayne onely in the ryuer. He sayde: Tomorow. He sayde: Euen as thou hast sayde, $\frac{t}{y}$ thou mayest knowe, $\frac{t}{y}$ there is none like vito the LORDE oure God: And the frogges shal be take from the, a from thy house, from thy seruauntes, a from thy people, ot remayne onely in the ryuer.

So Moses 匹 Aaron wēte from Pharao, © Moses cried wnto the LORDE for the appoyntment ouer the frogges, which he had promysed vato Pharao. And y LORDEdyd as Moses sayde. And the frogges dyed in $\dot{y}$ houses, in $\dot{y}$ courtes, a vpon $\dot{y}$ felde: $\mathbb{a}$ they gathered the together, here an heape, © there an heape, © the lande stanke of them. But whan Pharao sawe $\dot{y}$ he had gotten breth, his hert was hardened, and he herkened not vnto thē, euen as the LORDE had sayde.
And the Lorde spake vito Moses: Saie vnto Aaron: Stretch out thy staff, a smyte the dust vpon the earth, $\frac{t}{y}$ there maye be lyse in the whole löde of Egipte. They dyd so. And Aaron stretched out his hande with his staff, $\tau$ smote the dust vpon the earth, $\pi$ there were lyse vpon men and rpon catell: All the dust of the lande was turned vito lyse in all the lande of Egipte.

The Sorcerers also assayde likewyse with their Sorcerirs $\dot{y}$ they might brynge forth lyse, but they coude not. And $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ lyse were vpon men $₫$ catell. Then sayde $\dot{y}$ Sorcerers vnto Pharao: It is the fynger of God. But Pharaos hert was hardened, $\pi$ he herkened not vnto thē, euen as the LORDE had sayde.
And $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE saide nito Moses: Get $\dot{y}$ ́․ vp tomorow by tymes, a stonde before Pharao:

* 3 Re. 13. b. Exod. 9. f. and 10. c. Acto. 8. c.
beholde, he wil go vnto the water, a speake thou vnto him: Thus saieth 8 LORDE: let my people go, $\frac{t}{y}$ they maye serue me: yf not, beholde, I wil cause cruell wormes (or flyes) to come vion the, thy seruauntes, thy people, $\approx$ thy house, so $\frac{t}{y}$ all the Egipcians houses, a the felde, and what theron is shall be full of cruell wormes: © the same daye wil I separate the londe of + Gosen, wherin my people are, so $\frac{t}{y}$ no cruell worme shalbe there, that thou mayest knowe, that 1 am $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE in the myddest of the earth. And I wil set a delyueraunce betwene my people and thyne. Tomorow shal this token come to passe.

And the LORDE dyd so. And there came perlous cruell wormes in to Pharaos house, in to his seruauntes houses, © ypon all the londe of Egipte: and the londe was marred with noysome wormes.

Thē called Pharao for Moses $\mathbb{A}$ Aaron, a sayde: Go youre waye, a do sacrifice unto youre God in $\mathfrak{y}$ londe. Moses sayde: It is not mete, $\frac{t}{y}$ we shulde so do, so shulde we offer $\hat{y}$ abhominacion of $\hat{y}$ Egipcians vnto the LORDE oure God. Beholde, yf we shulde offer the abhominacion of $\mathfrak{y}$ Egipcians before their eyes, shulde they not stone vs? Thre dayes iourney will we go in the wyldernes, and do sacrifice vuto the LORDE oure God $\ddagger$ like as he hath sayde vinto vs.
Pharao sayde: I wil let you go, $\dot{y}$ ye maie do sacrifice vnto the LORDE youre God in the wyldernes (onely $\dot{y}$ ye go no farther) a praye for me. Moses sayde: Beholde, whan 1 am come forth from $\dot{y}$, I wil praye rnto $\hat{y}$ LORDE, $\frac{1}{\mathrm{y}}$ the cruell wormes maye be taken from Pharao, © from his seruaūtes, a frò his people, euen tomorow: onely disceaue me nomore, that thou woldest not let the people go to do sacrifice vuto the LORDE.
And Moses wēte out from Pharao, and prayed vuto the LORDE. And the LORDE dyd as Moses sayde, a toke awaye the cruell wormes from Pharao, from his seruauntes, and from his people, so $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ there remayned not one. But Pharao hardened his hert eué then also, and let not ẙ people go.

let my people go, $\dot{y}$ they maye scrue me. If thou wilt not, but holde them longer, beholde, the hande of the LORDE shal be vpon thy catell in the felde, ypon horses, ypon Asses, vpon Camels, vpon oxen, vpon shepe with a very sore pestilence. And $\hat{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE shall make a dinysion betwene the catell of the Israelites a the Egipcians, so $\dot{f}$ there shal nothinge dye of all that the chiddren of Israel hane. And $\hat{y}$ LORDE appoynted a tyme, and sayde: Tomorow shal the LORDE do this von earth.

And the LORDE dyd the same on the morow. And there dyed of all maner of catell of the Egipcians: but of $\dot{y}$ catell of $\dot{y}$ childre of Israel there dyed not one. And Pharao sent thither, a beholde, there was not one of the catell of Israel deed. But Pharaos hert was hardened, so $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ he let not $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ people go. Then sayde y LORDE vnto Moses t Aaron: Take youre handes full of aszshes out of the fornace, $\pi$ let Moses sprenkle it towarde heauen before Pharao, that it maye be dust in all the lande of Egipte, a that there maye be sores a blaynes rpon men a vpon catell in all the lande of Egipte.

And they toke aszshes out of $\hat{y}$ formace, $\pi$ stode before Pharao, © Moses sprenkled it towarde heane. Then were there sores and blaynes vpon men a von catell, so that the Sorcerers might not stōde before Moses by reason of the sores. For there were sores ypo the Sorcerers as well as ypon all the Egipcians. But the LORDE hardened Pharaos hert, so that he herkened not vnto them, euẽ as the LORDE had sayde vito Moses.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Moses: Get the vp tomorow by tymes, $\pi$ stonde before Pharao, ז speake vnto him: Thus sayeth y LORDE God of the Hebrues: let my people go, $\frac{ \pm}{y}$ they maye serue me, els wyll I at this tyme sende all my plages in to thine hert, $\pi$ vpon thy seruantes a vpon thy people: that thou mayest knowe, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ there is none like me in all londes. [^82]wyll I cause a mightie greate hayle to rayne, soch as hath not bene in the londe of Egipte, sence the tyme that it was grounded, hither to. And now sende thon, a sane thy catell, $\tau$ all $\dot{y}$ thou hast in the felde: for all men a catell that shalbe founde in the felde, a not brought in to the houses, yf the hayle fall vpon them, they shall dye. Now who so feared the worde of the LORDE amonge Pharaos seruauntes, caused his seruauntes t catell to flye in to the houses: but loke whose hertes regarded not the worde of $\dot{y}$ LORDE, left their seruauntes and catell in the felde.

Then sayde the LORDE monto Moses: Strech out thy hande towarde heane, that it maye hayle vpon all the lande of Egipte, vpon men, vpon catell, a vpon all herbes of the felde in the lande of Egipte. "So Moses stretched out his staff towarde heauen, and the LORDE caused it to thonder at hayle, so $\dot{y}$ the fyre rame alonge vpon the earth. Thus the LORDE hayled a rayned vpon the londe of Egipte, so that the hayle a fyre wente so horrybly together, as neuer was in all the lade of Egipte, sens the tyme that there were people therin. And the hayle smote the whole land of Egipte, all that was vpon $y$ felde, both men a catell, a smote all the herbes vpon the felde, a brake all the trees vpon $y$ felde, saue onely in the lande of Gosen, where the childre of Israel were, there it hayled not. Then sent Pharao at called for Moses a Aaron, a sayde vinto them: Now haue I symned, $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE is righteous, but I a my people are vngodly. Yet praye ye vnto the LORDE, that the thonder a hayle of God maye ceasse, then wyl I let you go, that ye shal tary here no longer. Moses sayde vnto him: Whan I am come out of the cite, I wyll stretch out myue handes vito the LORDE, so shal the thonder ceasse, $\tau$ there shal be nomore hayle: that thon mayest knowe, that the earth is the LORDES. But I knowe, $\frac{t}{y}$ both thou a thy seruauntes feare not yet the LORDE God. Thus the flax and the barlye were smytten: for the barlye was shot vp, a $\dot{y}$ flax was boulled: but the wheate and $\hat{y}$ rye were not sinytten, for they were late sowen.

So Moses wente from Pharao out of $\dot{y}$ cite, a stretched out his hādes vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE. And $y$ thoder a the hayle ceassed, a the rayne dropped not vpō the earth. But whā Pharao sawe $\dot{y}$ the rayne © thonder $๕$ hayle ceassed, he synned agayne, and herdened his hert, he $\tau$ his seruauntes. So Pharaos hert was hardened, $\frac{t}{y}$ he let not the childrē of lsrael go, euē as the LORDE had sayde by Moses.

AND the LORDE saide vato Moses: Go in vnto Pharao, for I haue hardened his hert a the hertes of his seruañes, $\dot{y}$ I might do these my tokēs amonge thē, $\tau$ that thou mightest shewe it in the eares of thy children $\mathbb{T}$ of thy childers children, what I haue done in Egipte, and how I haue shewed my tokens amōge thē, that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

So Moses a Aaron wente in vuto Pharao, r spake vinto him: Thus sayeth $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE God of the Hebrues: How longe refusest thou to submyt thy self vito me, to let my people go, $\dot{y}$ they maye serue me? And he turned him, a wente out from Pharao. Then saide Pharaos seruauntes vato him: How longe shall we be suared after this maner? Let the men go, that they may serue $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE their God. Knowest thou not yet, y Egipte is destroyed? Moses a Aaron were brought agayne to Pharao, which saide vnto them: Go youre waye, $\pi$ serue $\hat{y}$ LORDE youre God. But who are they $\frac{t}{y}$ shall go? Moses sayde: We wil go with yonge を olde, with sonnes and doughters, with shepe and oxe : for we have a feast of the LORDE. He sayde vnto thē : Let it be so, the LORDE be with you: Shulde I let you go a youre childrè also? loke that ye haue not some myschefe in hāde. Not so, but go ye that are men, and serue the LORDE, for that was youre desyre. And they thrust them out from Pharao.

Moses stretched out his staff ouer y lande of Egipte, $a$ the LORDE brought an east wynde in to the londe all $\frac{t}{y}$ daye $\tau$ all $\frac{t}{y}$ night, $\pi$ in the mornynge, the east wyude brought the greshoppers. And they came ouer the whole lande of Egipte, and lighted in all places of Egipte, so exceadinge many, that before tyme there were neuer soch, nether shallue here after: for they couered the londe, and made it darcke. And they ate vp all the herbes in $\dot{y}$ londe, $\mathbb{a}$ all the frutes upon the trees which remayned from y hayle, $\pi$ left no grene thinge behinde in the trees $\frac{\square}{\text { h herbes apon the felde }}$ in all the lande of Egipte.

Then Pharao called for Moses © Aaron in $\mathrm{Iz}^{\circ}$ all $\hat{y}$ haist, $\pi$ saide: I haue symued against the LORDE youre Gorl, a agaynst you: forgeue me my symue this once also, a pray the LORDE youre God, ${ }^{t}$ he maye take awaye fro me this death onely. And he wéte out from Pharao, a prayed vnto the LORDE. Thē the LORDE turned a maruelous strōge west wynde, and toke vp the greshoppers, $\mathbb{}$ cast them in to the reed see, so that there was not one left in all the quarters of Egipte. But the LORDE hardened Pharaos hert, that he let not the childré of Israel go. The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Stretch out thine hade towarde lreauen, that it be so darek in the londe of Egipte, $\dot{y}$ it maye be felt. And Moses stretched out his häde towarde heauen, thē was there a thicke darcknesse ${ }^{a}$ in all the londe of Egipte thre dayes, so $\frac{t}{y}$ in thre dayes no má save another, nor rose yp from $\mathrm{y}^{8}$ place where he was. But with the childre of 1srael there was light in their dwellinges. Then Pharao called for Moses, $\tau$ sayde: Go youre waye e serue the LORDE: onely leaue youre shepe © youre oxen here: let youre childrē go with you also. Moses sayde: Thou must geue vs offringes and brent offerynges, that we maye do sacrifice rnto the LORDE oure God. Morouer we knowe not wherwithall we shal serue $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE, tyll we come thither. But the LORDE hardened Pharaos hert, $\dot{y}$ he wolde

[^84]|not let them go. And Pharao sayde vnto him: Get the hence fro me, bewarre, that thou come nomore in my sight: For loke what daie so euer thou comest in my sight, thou shalt dye. Moses answered: Eue as thou hast sayde, I wil come no more in thy sight.

IN the thirde moneth after that the children $\mathfrak{A}$ of lsrael were gone out of the londe of Egipte, they came the same daye in to the wyldernes of Sinai (for they were departed from Raphidim, and wolde in to the wyldernes of Sinai) 'and there they pitehed in the wyldernes oner against the mounte. And Moses wente vp vnto God.
${ }^{d}$ And the LORDE called vnto him out of the mount, and sayde: Thus shalt thou saye vnto the house of lacob, and tell the children of Israel: Ye have sene what I haue done vuto the Egipeians, and how 1 have borne you vpon Aegles wynges, a brought you vito my self. e If ye wyll harken now vato my voyce, and kepe my couenaunt, ye shal be myne owne betore all people: for the whole earth is myne: and ye shall be vito me *a presterly kingdome, and an holy people. These are the wordes that thou shalt saye vnto the children of Israel.

[^94]3 Moses came and called for the elders of the people, and layed before them all these wordes, that the LORDE had commaunded. And all the people answered together, and sayde: *All that the LORDE hath sayde, wyll we do.

And Moses tolde the wordes of the people vito the LORDE agayne. And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Beholde, I wyll come vnto the in a thicke cloude, that the people maye heare my wordes, which I speake vnto the, and beleue the for euer. And Moses shewed the wordes of the people vnto the LORDE.

The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Go vnto the people, and sanctifie the to daye and tonorow, $\frac{t}{y}$ they maye wash their clothes, and be ready agaynst the thirde daye: for vpon the thirde daye shall the LORDE come downe vpon mount Sinai before all the people. And set markes rounde aboute the people, and saye vnto them: Bewarre, that ye go not vp in to $\stackrel{\ominus}{y}$ mount, ner touch ${ }^{\circ}$ border of it. + For who so euer toucheth y moūt, shal dye yf death. There shal no häde touch it, but he shall either be stoned, or shot thorow: whether it be beest or man, it shal not lyue. Whan the horne bloweth, then shal they come vp vinto the mounte.
Moses wente downe from the mount vnto the people, and sanctified them. And they waszshed their clothes. And he sayde vnto them: Be ready agaynst the thirde daye, and no man come at his wife.

Now whan the thirde daye came (and it was early) it beganne to thonder and lighten, and there was a thicke cloude rpon the mount, and a noyse of a trompet exceadinge mightie. And the people that were in the tentes, were afrayde. ${ }^{a}$ And Moses brought the people out of the tentes to mete with God, and they stode vider the mount.

But all mount Sinai smoked, because $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE came downe vpō it with fyre. And the smoke therof wente vp as the smoke of a fornace, so that the whole mount was exceadinge terrible. And the noyse of the trompet wéte out, and was mightie. Moses spake, a God answered him loude. Now whan the LORIE was come downe vpon mount Sinai, euen vpon the toppe of it, he called Moses [^95]vp vnto y toppe of the mount. And Moses weute vp.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto him: Go $\mathrm{I}^{2}$ downe, and charge the people, $\frac{t}{y}$ they preasse not vnto the LORDE to se him, and so many of them perishe. The rulers also that come nye vnto y LORDE, shal sanctifie them selues, lest the LORDE smyte the. But Moses sayde vnto the LORDE: The people can not come vp spon mount Sinai, for thou hast charged vs, a sayde: Set markes aboute the mount, and sanctifie it.

The LORDE sayde vnto him: Go thy waye, get $\dot{y}$ downe. Thou and Aaron with the shalt come vp: but the rulers and $\hat{y}$ people shal not preasse to come vp vito $y$ LORDE, lest he smyte thē. And Moses wente downe to the people, and tolde them.

TTHE habitacion shalt thou make of ten curteynes, of whyte twyned sylke, of yalowe sylke, of scarlet and purple. Cherubyms shalt thou make theron of broderd worke. The length of one curteyne shalbe eight and twentye cubytes $\hat{y}$ bredth foure cubytes: and all the ten shalbe like, and shalbe coupled fyue and fyue together, one vnto the other. And thou shalt make loupes of yalowe sylke by the edge of euery curtayne, where they shalbe coupled together, that there maye be euer two and two fastened together vpon their edges: fiftie loupes vpon euery curteyne, that one maye fasten the other together. And thou shalt make fiftie buttons of golde, wherwith the curteynes maye be coupled together, one to the other, that it maye be one couerynge.

Thou shalt make a coueringe also of goates heyer for a tente ouer the habitacion, ${ }^{a}$ of eleuen curteynes. The length of one curteyne shalbe thirtie cubytes, the bredth foure cubytes. And all the eleuen shalbe alike greate: fyue shalt thou couple together by the selues, a sixe also by them selues, $\frac{t}{y}$ thou mayest dubble the sixte curteyne in the fore front of the Tabernacle. And vpon euery curteyne thou shalt make fiftie loupes vō the edges of them, that they maie be coupled together by the edges. And fiftie buttons of brasse shalt thou make, and put the buttons in to the loupes, that the tent maye be coupled together, and be one couerynge.

As for the remnaunt of the curteynes of the tente, thou shalt let the halfe parte hange ouer behynde ${ }^{\circ}$ tēte, vpon both the sydes a [^105]cubyte longe, $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ the resydue maye be vpon the sydes of the Tabernacle, a couer it vpon both the sydes.

Besydes this couerynge thou shalt make a $\mathbb{C}$ couerynge of reed skynnes of rammes. And aboue this a coueringe of doo skinnes.

Thou shalt make bordes also for the habitacion, of Fyrre tre, which shall stonde: one borde shalbe ten cubytes longe, a a cubyte a a half brode. Two fete shal one borde haue, that one maye be set by the other.

Thus shalt thou make all the bordes for $\hat{y}$ Tabernacle: Twentye of them shal stōde towarde the south, which shal haue fourtye sokettes of syluer vnder them, two sokettes vnder euery borde for his two fete.

Likewyse vpon the other syde towarde the north there shall stonde twentye bordes also, and fourtye sokettes of syluer, two sokettes vnder euery borde.

But behynde the habitacion towarde $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ 目 west thou shalt make sixe bordes, and two bordes mo for the two corners of the habitacion, that euery one of them both maye be coupled from vnder vp with his corner borde, and aboue vpon the heade to come eauen together with a clipe : so that there be eight bordes with their syluer sokettes, wherof there shalbe sixtene, two vnder euery borde.

And thou shalt make barres of fyrre tre, fyue for the bordes rpon the one syde of the Tabernacle, and fyue for the bordes vpon the other syde of the Tabernacle, and fyue for the bordes behinde $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ Tabernacle towarde the west. And the barres shalt thou shute thorow ${ }^{\circ}$ myddest of the bordes, and faste alltogether from $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ one corner to f other. And thou shalt ouerlaye the bordes with golde, and make their rynges of golde, that the barres maye be put therin. And the barres shalt thou onerlaye with golde, and so shalt thou set vp the Tabernacle, acordinge to $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ fashion as thou hast sene vpon $\mathfrak{y}$ mount.

And thou shalt make a vayle of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, a whyte twyned sylke. And Cherubyns shalt thon make theron of broderd worke, and shalt hange it vpon foure pilers of Fyrre tre which are ouerlayed with golde, hauynge knoppes of golde, and foure sokettes of syluer. And the vayle shalt thou festen with buttons, and set the Arke of wytnesse within the vayle, that it maye be vito you a difference betwixte the holy and the Most holy.

And thou shalt set the Mercy seate vpon the Arke of wytnesse in the Most holy. But set the table without the vayle, and the candilsticke ouer agaynst y table vpon $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ south syde of the Tabernacle, that the table maie stonde on the north syde.

And in the dore of the Tabernacle thou shalt make an hanginge, of yalow sylke, purple, scarlet and whyte twyned sylke. And for the same hanginge thou shalt make fyue pilers of Fyrre tre, ouerlayed with golde, with knoppes of golde. And shalt cast fyue sokettes of brasse for them.

$\mathbb{C y}$ erbij. Chapter.

And to $\dot{f}$ habitacion thou shalt make a courte, an hangynge of whyte twyned sylke: vpō $\dot{y}$ one syde an C. cubytes löge towarde the south, axx. pilers vpon xx. brasen sokettes, $\pi$ the knoppes with their whopes of syluer. Likewyse vpon ${ }^{\circ}$ north syde there shal be an hanginge of an C. cubytes lōge, twenty pilers vpon twenty brasen sokettes, and their knoppes with their whopes of syluer.

But vpon the west syde the bredth of $\frac{y}{y}$ courte shal have an hanginge of fiftic eubites longe, $\underset{\pi}{ }$ ten pilers vpon ten sokettes. Vpō the east syde also shal the bredth of the courte haue fiftie cubytes, so that the hangynge haue rpon one syde fyftene cubites, and thre pilers vpō thre sokettes: And vpon $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ other syde fiftene cubytes also, and thre pilers vpo thre sokettes.

And in the courte gate there shalbe an hangynge twenty cubytes brode, of yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple, and whyte twyned sylke, wrought with nedle worke, and foure pilers ypon their foure sokettes. All the pilers rounde aboute the courte shall haue syluer whopes, a syluer knoppes, a sokettes of brasse. And the length of ${ }^{\prime \prime}$ courte shal be an hīdreth eubytes, the bredth fiftie cubytes, the heygth fyue cubytes, of whyte twyned sylke and $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ sokettes therof shalbe of brasse. All ý vessels also of the habitacion to all maner seruyce, and all the nales of it, and all the nales of the courte shalbe of brasse.

Commaunde $\dot{y}$ children of Israel, ${ }^{b} \frac{t}{y}$ they bringe vnto y the most cleare a pure oyle oline beaten, to geue lighte, $\frac{t}{y}$ it maye all waye be put in the lapes in the Tabernacle of wytnes without the vayle, that hangeth before the wytnesse. And Aarō and his sonnes shal dresse it from the euenynge vatyll $y$ mornynge before the LORDE. This shalbe vnto you a perpetuall custome for youre posterities amonge the children of Israel.

(Tye rrbiit. Chapter.

AND thou shalt take vnto the Aaron thy brother and his sonnes frō amonge the childré of Israel, that he maye be my prest: namely Aaron © his sonnes Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar: a thou shalt make holy clothes for Aarō thy brother, honorable and glorious, $\pi$ shalt speake vnto all them that are wise of hert, whom I haue fylled with the sprete of wiszlome, that they make garmentes to Aaron for his consecracion, that he maye be my prest.

These are $\hat{y}$ garmentes which they shal make: a brestlappe, an ouerbody cote, a tunyele, an albe, a myter and a girdell. Thus shal they make holy garmentes for thy brother Aarō and his somes, that he maye be my prest. They shal take therto golde, yalow silke, scarlet, purple, and whyte sylke.

The ourrboty cote shal they make of golde, yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, a whyte twyned sylke of broderd worke, that it maye be festened together vpon both the sydes by $\hat{y}$ edges therof. And his gyrdell vpō it shall be of $\mathfrak{y}$ same workmáshippe đ stuff, euen of golde yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple, $\tau$ whyte twyned sylke. And thou shalt take two Onix stones, and grane in them the names of the children of Israel. Syxe names rpon the one stone, and the sixe other names rpon the other stone acordinge to the order of their age. This shalt thou do by the stonegrauers that graue signettes, so that $\dot{y}$ stones with the names of the children of Israel to be set rounde aboute with golde : and thou shalt put them vpon the two shulders of the ouer body cote, that they maye be stones of remembraunce for the children of Israel, that Aaron maye beare their names vpon both his shulders before the LORDE for a remembraunce.

Thou shalt make hokes of golde also, and two wrethe cheynes of pure golde, and shalt fasten them vato the hokes.

The brestlappe of iudgment shalt thou make of broderd worke, enen after the worke of the ouerbody cote: of golde, yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, and whyte twyued sylke. Foure square shall it be and dubble, an hande bredth longe, and an handebredth brode. And thou shalt fill it with foure rowes full of stones. Let the first rowe be a Sardis, a Topas, and a Smaragde. The seconde: a Ruby, a Saphyre, and a Dyamonde. The thirde: a Ligurios, an Achatt, and an Ametyst. The fourth: a Turcas, an Onix, and a Iaspis. In golde shall they be sett in all the rowes, and shal stonde acordinge to $\dot{y}$ twolue names of the children of Israel, grauen of the stonegraners, euery one with his name acordinge to the twolue trybes.

And upon the brestlappe thou shalt make wrethen cheynes by $\dot{f}$ corners of pure golde, and two golde rynges, so, that thon faste the same two rynges vnto two edges of the brestlappe, and put the two wrethe cheynes of golde in the same two rynges, that are in two edges of the brestlappe. But the two endes of $\dot{y}$ two wrethen cheynes shalt thou fasten in the two hokes vpon the onerbody cote one ouer agaynst another.

And thou shalt make two other rynges of golde, and fasten them vnto $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ other two erlges of $\dot{y}$ brestlappe, namely to $\underset{y}{f}$ borders therof, wherwith it maye hange on the ynsyde ypon the ouerbody cote. And yet shalt thon make two rynges of golde, and fasten them vpon the two edges beneth to the oucrbody cote, rpon the outsyde one ouer agaynst another, where the ouerbody cote ioyneth together. And the hrestlappe shall be fastened cote with a yalow lace, that it maye lye close vpon the ouerbody cote, and that the brestlappe be not lowsed from the ouerbody cote.

Thus shall Aaron beare the names of the children of Israel in $\dot{y}$ brestlappe of iudgment vpon his hert, whan he goeth in to the Sanctuary, for a remembraunce before the LORDE allwaye. And in the brestlappe of iudgment thou shalt put * light and perfectnesse, that they be rpon Aaros hert, whan he goeth in before the LORDE, and that he maye beare the indgment of the children of Israel vpon his hert before the LORDE allwaye.

Thou shalt make the tunykle also to the onerbody cote all of yalow sylke, and aboue in the myddest there shal be an hole, and a bonde folden together rounde aboute the hole, that it rente not. And beneth vpon the hemme thou shalt make pomgranates of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple rounde aboute, and belles of golde betwixte the same rounde aboute: that there be euer a golden bell and a pomgranate, a golden bell and a pomgranate ${ }^{a}$ rounde aboute the hemme of the same tunycle. And Aaron shall have it vpon him whā he mynistreth, that the soude therof maye be herde, whan he goeth out and in at the Sanctuary before the LORDE, that he dye not.

Thou shalt make a foreheade plate also of pure golde, and graue therin (after the workmanshipe of the stone grauer): the holynes of the LORDE, a with a yalow lace shalt thou fasten it vnto the fore front of the myter ypon Aarons fore heade, $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{t}}$ Aaron maie so beare $\dot{y}$ synne of the holy thinges, which the childree of Israel halowe in all their giftes and Sanctuary. And it shall be allwaye vpon his fore heade, that he maye reconcyle them before the LORDE.

Thou shalt make an albe also of whyte sylke, and a myter of whyte sylke, and a gyrdle of nedle worke.

And for Aarons sonnes thou shalt make cotes, gyrdles and bonetes, honorable and glorious, and shalt put them vpon thy brother Aaron and his sonnes, and shalt anoynte them, and fyll their handes, and consecrate them, that they maye be my prestes. And thou shalt make them lynnen breches, to couer the flesh of their preuities, from the loynes vnto the thyes. And Aaron and his sonnes shall haue them on, whan they go in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse, or go rnto the altare to mynister in the Holy, that they beare not their synne, and dye. This shalbe a perpetual custome for him, and his sede after him.

THIS is it also, that thou shalt do unto them, that they maye be consecrated prestes vito me. "Take a yonge bullocke, and two rammes without blemish, vnleuended bred, a vnleuended cakes myxte with oyle, and wafers of swete bred tempered with oyle: Of wheate floure shalt thou make them all, and put them in a maunde, a brynge them in the maunde, with the bullocke đ two rammes.

And thou shalt brynge Aaron th his sonnes vnto the dore of the Tabernacle of witnesse, (t) wash them with water, is take the garmentes, and put von Aaron the albe and the tunycle, a the ouer body cote, $\tau$ the brestlappe to $\mathfrak{y}$ ouer body cote, a shalt gyrde him on the out syde vpon the oner body cote, and set the myter vpon his heade, and the holy crowne vpon the myter: and shalt take the anoyntinge oyle, and poure it vpon his heade, and anoynte him.

Thou shalt brynge forth his sonnes also, a put the albes ypon them, and gyrde both Aaron a them with gyrdles, a set the bonettes vpon their heades, that they maye have the presthode for a perpetuall custome.

And thou shalt fyll the hades of Aaron and his sonnes, and brynge forth the bullocke before the Tabernacle of wytnesse. * And Aaron and his sonnes shall laye their hädes vpon the heade of the bullocke, and thou shalt sley the bullocke before the LORDE, at the dore of the tabernacle of wytnesse, and shalt take of his bloude, and put it vpon the hornes of the altare with thy fynger, and poure all the other bloude vpon the botome of the altare.
${ }^{b}$ And thou shalt take all the fat that couereth the bowels and the nett ypon the leuer, and the two kydneys with the fat that is aboute them, and burne them vpon the altare. But the bullockes flesh, skynne and donge, shalt thou burne with fyre without the hoost: for it is a synneofferynge.

[^106]The one ramme shalt thou take also, and $\mid \mathbb{C}$ Aaron with his sonnes shall laye their handes vpon his heade. Then shalt thou sleye him, and take of his bloude, and sprenkle it von the altare rounde aboute. But the ramme shalt thou deuyde in peces, and wash his bowels and his legges, and laye them ypon the peces and the heade, and burne the whole ramme vpon the altare: for it is a burntofferynge, and a swete sauoure of the sacrifice vnto the LORDE.
${ }^{c} A$ s for the other ramme, thou shalt take him, and Aaron with his sonnes shall laye their handes ypon his heade, and thon shalt slaye him, and take of his bloude, and put it ypon the typpe of the right eare of Aaron and his sonnes, and voon $\dot{y}$ thombe of their right handes, and ypon the greate too of their right fete, and thou shalt sprenkle the bloude rpon the altare rounde aboute, and shalt take of the bloude ypon the altare and the anoyntinge oyle, and sprenckle it rpen Aaron and his vestymentes, tpon his sonnes and their vestymentes. So shall he and his clothes, his sonnes and their clothes be consecrated.
${ }^{a}$ Then shalt thou take the fat of the ramme, the rompe, and the fatt that couereth $y$ bowels, the net vpon the lener, and the two kydneys with the fatt that is aboute them, and the right shulder (for it is a ramme of cossecracion) and a symnel of bred, and an oyled cake, and a wafer out of the mannde of the vmlenended bred that stondeth before $f$ LORDE, and put all in to the handes of faron and of his somes, and waue it vuto the LORDE. The take it out of their handes, and burne it apon the altare for a burnt offeringe, to be a swete sauoure ruto $y$ LORDE. For it is the LORDES sacrifice.
${ }^{e}$ And thou shalt take the brest of the ramme of Aarōs consecraciō, $\pi$ shalt wane it before $\dot{y}$ LORDE, $\dot{y}$ shal be his parte. And thus shalt thou halowe $\hat{y}$ Wanebrest of $\hat{y}$ Heueshulder ( $\frac{t}{y}$ are waned a heaned) of $\frac{8}{y}$ ramme of the consecracion of Aaron $x$ his sonnes: And it shalbe a perpetuall custome for Aaro and his sonnes of $y$ children of Israel : for it is an Heue offrynge, and the Heue offrynge shalbe the LORDES dewtye of the children of Israel, in their $\ddagger$ deade offrynges and Heue offrynges which they do vito the LORDE.

And the holy garmentes of Aaron shall his sonnes have after him, that they maie be anoynted therin, a $\dot{\mathbf{y}}$ their handes maye be fylled. ${ }^{a}$ Loke which of his sonnes shalbe prest in his steade, the sane shal put them on sene dayes, that he maye go in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse, to mynister in the Sanctuary.

But the ramme of consecracion shalt thou take, ${ }^{b}$ and seeth his flesh in an holy place. And Aaron with his sonnes shal eate the flesh of the same ramme with the bred in the maunde, at the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse: for there is an attonement made therwith, to fyll their handes, that they maye be consecrated. A strañger shal not eate therof, for it is holy.

But yf eny of the flesh of the consecracion, and of the bred remaine vntyll the mornynge, thou shalt burne it with fyre, and not let it be eaten, for it is holy. And thus shalt thou do with Aaron and his sonnes all that I haue commaunded $\dot{y}$. Senen dayes shalt thou fyll their handes, and offer a bullocke daylie for a synne offeringe, because of them ${ }^{t}$ shalbe reconciled. And thou shalt halowe the altare, whan thou reconcylest it: a shalt anoynte it, that it maye be consecrated. Seuen dayes shalt thou reconcyle the altare, a consecrate it, that it maye be an altare of the Most holy. Who so wyll touch the altare, must be consecrated.

And this shalt thou do with the altare: ${ }^{\text {c }}$ Two lambes of one yeare olde shalt thou offer euery daye vpon it: the one lambe in the mornynge, and the other at euen. And to one lambe a tenth deale of wheate floure, meggled with $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{~g}}$ fourth parte of an Hin of beaten oyle, and $\stackrel{f}{y}$ fourth parte of an Hin of wine for a drynk offerynge. With the other lambe at euen shalt thou do like as with $\dot{y}$ meate offerynge and drynk offerynge in the mornynge, for a swete sauoure of sacrifice vnto $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE. This is the daylie burntofferynge amonge youre posterities, at the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse before the LORDE, *where I will proteste vato you, and talke with the. There wil I proteste into the children of Israel, and be sanctified in my glory, and wyl halowe the Tabernacle of wytnes and the altare, and consecrate Aaro and his sonnes, to be my prestes. ${ }^{d}$ And I

Uye mr. Chapter.

TTHOU shalt make also an incense altare to burne incense, of Fyrre tre, a cubyte longe a brode, eauen foure squared, and two cubytes hye with his hornes, it shalt ouerlaye it with pure golde, the rofe $\pi$ the walles of it rounde aboute, and the hornes therof, it a crowne of golde shalt thou make rounde aboute it, and two golde rynges on ether syde vnder the crowne, that there maie be staues put therin, to beare it with all.

The staues shalt thou make of Fyrre tre also, and ouerlaye the with golde: and shalt set it before the rayle, that hangeth before the Arke of wytnesse, and before the Mercy seate $\frac{t}{y}$ is vpon the wytnesse, from whence I wyl proteste vnto the. And Aaron shal burne swete incense theron euery morninge, whā he dresseth the lampes. In like maner whan he lighteth the lampes at euen, he shall burne soch incense also. This shal be the daylie incense before the LORDE amonge youre posterities.
${ }^{\text {e }}$ Ye shall put no straunge incense therin, $\mathbb{\pi}$ offer no burntofferynge, ner meatofferynge, nether drynkofferynge theron. And trpon i hornes of it shall Aaron reconcyle once in a yeare, with $\dot{y}$ bloude of the synneofferynge, which they shall offer that are reconcyled. This shal be done amonge youre posterities for this is the most holy vinto the LORDE.
${ }^{f}$ And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: Whan thou nombrest the heades of the children of Israel, then shal euery one geue vnto the LORDE the reconcylinge of his soule, ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ there happee not a plage vnto them, whan they are nombred. [^108]fand the poore shal not geue lesse in the half Sycle, which is geuen vnto the LORDE to be an Heue offerynge for the reconcylinge of their soules.

And this money of recōcilinge shalt thou take of the children of Israel, a put it to the Gods seruyce of the Tabernacle of wytnes, that it maye be a remembraunce vito the children of Israel before the LORDE, that he maye let himself be reconcyled ouer their soules.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: ${ }^{a}$ Thou shalt make a brasen lauer also with a fote of brasse to wash, and shalt set it betwiste the Tabernacle of witnesse and $\dot{y}$ altare, and put water therin, that Aarō and his sonnes maye wash their handes and fete therout, whan they go in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse, or to the altare, to mynistre vnto the LORDE with offerynge incense, $\frac{t}{y}$ they dye not. This shalbe a perpetuall custome for him and his sede amonge their posterities.

And $\dot{y}$ LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: ${ }^{6}$ Take unto the spyces of the best, fyue hundreth Sycles of Myrre, and of Cynamō half so moch, euen two hundreth and fyftie, and of Kalmus two hundreth and fiftye, and of Cassia fyue hundreth (after the Sycle of the Sanctuary) I an Hin of oyle olyue, and make an holy anoyntinge oyle, after the craft of the Apotecary.
30 And there with shalt thou anoynte the Tabernacle of wytnesse, ${ }^{\text {ct }}$ the Arke of wytnes, the table with all his apparell, $f$ candilsticke with his apparell, the altare of incense, the altare of burntofferynges with all his apparell, a the lauer with his fote: and thus shalt thou consecrate them, that they maye be most holy: for who so wil touch thē, must be consecrated. Thou shalt anoynte Aaron also, and his sonnes, and consecrate them to be my prestes.

And thou shalt speake vnto the childre of Israel, and saye: This oyle shalbe an holy oyntment vnto me amonge youre posterities: It shal not be poured vpon mans body, nether shalt thou make eny soch like it, for it is holy: therfore shal it be holy vito you. Who so maketh eny soch like, or geueth a straūger therof, the same shalbe roted out from amonge his people.

[^109]And the LORDE sayde vato Moses: Take vnto the spyces: Balme, Stacte, Galban, and pure franckencense, of one as moch as of another, and make incense therof (after the craft of the Apotecary) myngled together, that it maye be pure a holy. And thou shalt beate it to pouller, and shalt put of the same before the wytnesse in the Tabernacle of wytnesse, from whence I wyll proteste vnto the, but it shalbe holy vnto the for the LORDE. ${ }^{2}$ BUT whan the people sawe that Moses made loge taryenge to come downe fro the mount, they gathered the together agaynst Aaron, a sayde rato him: ${ }^{b} \mathrm{~V} \mathrm{P}$, and make vs goddes, to go before vs, for we can not tell what is become of this man Moses, that brought vs out of Egipte. Aaron sayde vnto them: 'Plucke of the golden earynges from the eares of youre wyues, of youre sonnes, a of youre doughters, a brynge them vnto me. Then all the people pluckte of their golden earynges from their eares, a brought them vnto Aaron. And he toke them of their handes, $\pi$ fashioned it with a grauer. ${ }^{d}$ And they made a molten calfe, and sayde: These are thy goddes (O Israel) that brought the out of the londe of Egipte.
Whan Aaron sawe that, he buylded an altare before him, and caused it be proclamed, and sayde: Tomorow is the LORDES feast. And they arose vp early in the mornynge, and offred burntofferynges, and brought deadofferynges also: "Then the people sat them downe to eate and drynke, a rose vp to playe.
i But the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Go get the downe, for thy people whom thou broughtest out of the londe of Egipte, haue marred all: they are soone gone out of the waie, which I commaunded them. They haue made them a molten calfe, and haue worshipped it, a offred vnto it, a sayde: & These [^110]are thy goddes (O Israel) that brought the out of the lande of Egipte.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: I se, ${ }^{2}$ that it is a styffnecked people, and now suffre me, that my wrath maye waxe whote ouer them, a that I maye consume them, so wil I make a greate people of the.

But Moses be sought the LORDE his God, a sayde: Oh LORDE, wherfore wil thy wrath waxe whote ouer thy people, whom thou hast brought out of the löde of Egipte with greate power đ a mightie hāde? Wherfore shulde the Egipcians speake, a saye: He hath brought the for their myschefe, to slaye them in the mountaynes, and to destroye the vtterly from the earth? O turne the from the fearcenesse of thy wrath, a be gracious ouer the wickednesse of thy people. Remembre thy sernautes Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, vnto who $\ddagger$ thou swarest by thyne owne self, and saydest: I wil multiplye youre sede as the starres of heauen, and all the londe that I haue promysed you, wil I geue vnto youre sede, a they shall inheret it for euer. Thus the LORDE repented of the euell, which he sayde he wolde do into his people.

Moses tmrned him, a wente downe from the mount, and in his hande he had the two tables of wytnesse, which were wrytte vpon both the sydes, and were Gods worke, as the wrytinge was the wrytinge of God therin. Now whan Iosua herde the noyse of $\hat{y}$ people, as they shouted, he sayde vnto Moses: This is a noyse of warre in the hoost. He answered: It is not a noyse of them that haue the victory, and of them that haue the worse, but I heare a noyse of synginge at a daunse.

Whan he came nye vnto the hoost, and sawe the calfe, and the daunsynge, "he was moued with wrath, and cast the tables out of his hande, and brake them beneth the mount. : And he toke the calfe that they had made, and brent it with fyre, and stamped it vnto poulder, and strowed it in the water, a gaue it vnto the children of Israel to drynke, a sayde mnto Aaron: What dyd this people vnto the, that thou hast brought so greate a synne vpon them?

Aaron sayde: Let not the wrath of my lorde waxe fearce: thou knowest, that this is a wicked people. They sayde vnto me: Make vs goddes to go before vs, for we can not tell what is become of this man Moses, $\dot{y}$ brought vs out of the londe of Egipte. I sayde rnto them : Who so hath golde, let him plucke it of, and geue it me: and I cast it in the fyre, therof came this calfe.

Now whan Moses sawe, that the people were naked (for Aaron, whan he set them vp, made them naked to their shame) he wēte in to the gate of the hoost, and sayde: who so belongeth vnto the LORDE, let him come hither vnto me. Then all the children of Leui gathered them selues vato him, and he sayde vnto them: Thus sayeth the LORDE the God of Israel: Euery man put his swerde by his syde, and go thorow in and out from one gate to another in the hoost, and slaye euery man his brother, frende, © neghboure.

The children of Leui dyd, as Moses sayde vnto them. And there fell of the people the same daye thre thousande men. Thê sayde Moses: Cōsecrate youre handes this daie vnto the LORDE, euery man ypon his sonne and brother, that the prayse maye be geuen ouer you this daye. Ye hare done a greate synne. Now I wil go vp vito the LORDE, yf peraduenture I maye make an attonement for youre synnes.

Now whā Moses came agayne vnto $\hat{y}$ LORDE, he saide: Oh this people haue done a greate synne, a haue made them goddes of golde. * Now for geue them their synne: yf not, the wype me out of thy boke, that thou hast wrytten. The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: What? Him that symeth against me, wil I wype out of tmy boke. Go thou thy waye therfore, and brynge $\hat{y}$ people thither as I haue sayde vnto the, "Beholde, myne angell shall go before the. But in the daye of my visitacion I wyll vyset their synnes vpon them. So the LORDE plaged the people, because they made y calfe which Aaron made.

The knoppes a braunches therof proceaded out of it, and were all one pece of fyne beaten golde. And he made the seuen lampes with their snoffers a outquenchers of pure golde. a $\quad$ ND the altare of burntoffrynges made he of Fyrre tre, ${ }^{a}$ fyue cubytes lige a brode, eauen foure squared, a thre cubites hye. And made foure hornes, which proceaded out of the foure corners therof, and ouerlaied it with brasse. And he made all maner of vessels for the altare, cauldrons, shouels, basens, fleshokes, and colepannes all of brasse. And rnto the altare he made a brasen gredyron of net worke rounde aboute, from vader vp vnto the myddest of the altare, I cast foure rynges in the foure corners of the brasen gredyron, for the staues: which he made of Fyrre tre, and ouerlayed them with brasse, and put them in the rynges by the sydes of the altare, to beare it withall, and nade it holowe with bordes.

And he made the Lauer of brasse, © his fote also of brasse vpon the place of $\hat{y}$ hoost, that laye before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse.
And he made the courte on $\hat{y}$ south syde: hangynges an hundreth cubytes longe, of whyte twyned sylke, with the twètye pilers therof, and twentye sokettes of brasse : but the knoppes and whopes of syluer. In like maner ypon the north syde an hundreth cubytes with twentye pilers, and twentye sokettes of brasse, but their knoppes a whoopes of syluer. Vpon the west syde fiftie cubytes with ten pilers and tē sokettes, but their knoppes and whoopes of syluer. Vpon the East syde fiftie cubytes. Fiftene cubytes vpon either syde of the courte dore, with thre pilers and thre sokettes: So that all the hanginges of the courte were of whyte twyned sylke, and the sokettes of the pilers were of brasse, a their knoppes and whoopes of syluer: their heades were ouerlayed with syluer, $\mathbb{a}$ all the pilers of the courte were whooped aboute with syluer.

And the hangynge in $\dot{y}$ courte gate made he with nedle worke, of yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple, $\pi$ whyte twyned sylke, twentye cubytes longe, a fyue cubytes hye, after the measure of the hanginges of the courte: foure pilers also therto. $\tau$ foure sokettes of brasse, and their knoppes of syluer, and their heades ouerlayed, and their whoopes of syluer. And all the nales of the Habitacion and of the courte rounde aboute, were of brasse.

This is now the summe of the Habitacion of wytnesse (which was counted at the cōmaundemēt of Moses to $\hat{y}$ Gods seruice of the Leuites vnder the hade of Ithamar the sonne of Aaron the prest) which Bezaleel the somne of Vri, the sonne of Hur of the trybe of Iuda made, all as the LORDE commaunded Moses. And with him Ahaliab $\dot{y}$ somne of Ahisamach of the trybe of Dan, a connynge grauer, to worke nedle worke, with yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, $\tau$ whyte sylke.

All the golde $\dot{y}$ was wrought in all this worke of the Sanctuary (which was geuen to the Waue offerynge) is nyne $\boldsymbol{r}$ twenty hūdreth weight, seuen hundreth तt thirtie Sycles, after $\dot{y}$ Sycle of $\dot{y}$ Sanctuary. * The syluer $\dot{y}$ came of the congregacion, was fyue score hundreth weight, a thousande, seuen hundreth, fyue and seuentye Sycles, after $\dot{y}$ Sycle of the Sanctuary: so many heades so many half Sycles, after the Sycle of the Sanctuary, of all that were nombred from twentye yeare olde and aboue, euen sixe hundreth thousande, thre thousande, fyue hundreth and fiftye.

Of the fyue score hundreth weight of syluer, were cast the sokettes of the Sanctuary, and the sokettes of the vayle, an hüdreth sokettes of the fyue score hundreth weight, an hundreth weight to euery sokett. Of the thousande, seuen hundreth and fyue and seuentye Sycles were made the knoppes of the pilers (and their heades ouerlayed) and their whoopes.

As for the Waue offerynge of brasse, it was seuentye hundreth weight, two thousande and foure hundreth Sycles: Wherof were made the sokettes in the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and the brasen altare, and the brasen gredyron therto, and all the vessels of the altare, and the sokettes of $y$ courte rounde aboute, and the sokettes of $\hat{y}$ courte gate, all $\mathfrak{y}$ nales of the Habitacion, $\mathbb{z}$ all $\hat{y}$ nales of $\hat{y}$ courte rounde aboute.

Che mrix. Chapter.

OF the yalowe sylke, scarlet, © purple, they ${ }^{b}$ made Aarons mynistringe restimentes, to do seruyce in the Sanctuary, as ẙ LORDE cōmaunded Moses.

And he made the ouer body cote, of golde, yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple, $\mathbb{a}$ whyte twywed sylke, and bett the golde in to thime plates, and cut it in to wyres, that it might be wrought amonge the yalowe sylke, searlet, purple and whyte sylke, © made it so, that $\dot{y}$ ouerbody cote came together by the edges on both the sydes. And his gyrdel was after the same craft a worke: eue of golde, yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple and whyte twyned sylke, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

And they wrought two Onix stones, set rounde aboute with golde, grauen by the stone grauer with the names of the childre of 1srael: and fastened them vpo the shulders of the ouerbody cote, that they might be stones of remébraunce vnto the children of Israel, as the LORDE comaunded Moses.

And they made the brestlappe after the craft © worke of the ouerbody cote: of golde, yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple, a whyte twyned sylke, so that it was foure square a dubble, an hande bredth longe and brode, and fylled it with foure rowes of stones. The first rowe was: a Sardis, a Topas, and a Smaragde. The secōde : a Ruby, a Saphyre, and a Dyamonde. The thirde: a Ligurios, an Achat, and an Amatist. The fourth: a Tureas, an Onix it a Iaspis: closed rounde aboute with golde in all the rowes. And the stones stode after the twolue names of the children of Israel, granen by the stone grauer, euery one with his name, acordinge to the twolue trybes.

And vpon the brestlappe they made wrythen cheynes of pure golde, and two hokes of golde, a two golde rynges, and fastened the two rynges vpon the two edges of the brestlappe: and $\dot{y}$ two wrythen cheynes put they in the two rynges vpon the corners of the brestlappe. But the two endes of $\dot{y}$ wrethen cheynes put they to the two hokes, $\mathbb{a}$ fastened them vpon the corners of the ouer body cote, one ouer agaynst another.

And they made two other rynges of golde, a fastened them to the other two corners of the brestlappe by the edge of it, that it might hange rpon the out syde of the ouerbody cote. And they made yet two other golde rynges, which they put beneth vpon the two corners of the ouerbody cote, one ouer agaynst another, where the ouerbody cote ioyneth together, that the brestlappe might be festened by his rynges mnto $\hat{y}$ rynges of the ouerbody cote with a yalowe lace, that it might lye close vpon $\dot{y}$ ouerbody cote, and not be lowsed from ẙ ouerbody cote, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

And he made the tunycle vnto the ouerbody cote, wrought all of yalow sylke, $\mathbb{I}$ the hole therof aboue in the myddest, $\pi$ a bonde folde together rounde aboute the hole, that it shulde not rente. And beneth vpon $\mathfrak{y}$ hemme of it, they made pomgranates of yalow sylke, searlet, purple, $\varsigma$ whyte twyned sylke: $\tau$ they made belles of pure golde, which they put betwiste $y$ pomgranates rounde aboute vpon the hemme of the tunycle, a bell a a pomgranate, a bell x a pomgranate rounde aboute, to do seruyce in, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

And they made albes also wrought of whyte sylke for Aaron a his sonnes, © $\dot{y}$ myter of whyte sylke, and the goodly bonettes of whyte sylke, and breches of twyned whyte lynnen, and the girdle of nedle worke euen of whyte twyned sylke, yalow sylke, searlet, and purple, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

They made the fore heade plate also to $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{}$ holy crowne, of pure golde, and wrote therin with grauen worke: the holynes of the LOR DE, and festened a yalowe lace theron, to tye it vnto the myter aboue, as the LORDE cōmaunded Mİoses.

Thus the whole worke of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ Habitacion of $\dot{y}$ Tabernacle of wytnesse, was fynished. And the childree of 1srael dyd all that the LORDE comaunded Moses, a brought the Habitacion vnto Moses: the Tabernacle $\mathbb{t}$ all the apparell therof, the buttons, bordes, barres, pilers, sokettes, $\dot{y}$ couerynge of reed skynnes of rammes, the couerynge of doo skynnes, a the vayle, $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ Arke of wytnesse with the staues therof, the Mereyseate, the table a all his apparell, a the shewbred, the candilsticke, with the lampes prepared, and all his apparell, a oyle for the lightes, the golden altare, the anoyntinge oyle đ incense, the hanginge in the Tabernaele dore, the brasen altare, a his brasen gredyron with his staues, $\}$ all his apparell, $\mathfrak{y}$ lauer with his foote, the hangynges of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ courte with the pilers $\mathbb{a}$ sokettes therof, y hanginge in the courte gate with his pilers a nales, a all the ordynaunce for the seruyce of the Habitacion of y Tabcrnacle of wytnesse, y mynistringe vestimētes of Aarō ẙ prest, to do seruyce in ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{y}}$ Sanctuary, $\pi$ the garmētes of his sonnes, $\dot{y}$ they might execute $\dot{y}$ prestes office. Acordinge to all that $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE cōmaunded Moses, euē so dyd the childree of Israel in all this seruyce. And Moses sawe all $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ worke, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they dyd it eue as $\dot{y}$ LORDE had commaunded, and he blessed them.

AND $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE spake vnto Moses, a sayde: In the fyrst daye of the first moneth shalt thou set vp $\dot{f}^{\text {y }}$ Habitaciō of ${ }^{\circ}$ Tabernacle of wytnesse, and shal put the Arke of wytnes therin, and hange the vayle before $y$ Arke. And thou shalt bringe in the table, and garnish it, and brynge in the eandilsticke, and put the lampes theron. And ${ }_{y}$ goldé altare of incense shalt thou set before $\dot{y}$ Arke of wytnesse, a hange up the hanginge in the dore of the Habitacio. But the altare of burntofferinges shalt thou set before the dore of the Habitacion of the Tabernacle of wytnesse: a the lauer betwixte the Tabernacle of wytnesse and the altare, and put water therin, a set the courte rounde aboute, and hange $\mathrm{v}^{1}$ the hanginge in the courte gate.

And thou shalt take the anoyntynge oyle, and anoynte the Habitacion and all that is there in, *and shalt consecrate it, and all $\dot{y}$ apparell therof, that it maye be holy. And thou shalt anoynte the altare of burntofferynges and all his vessels, and consecrate it, that it maye be most holy. The lauer also d his fote shalt thou anoynte a consecrate.
${ }^{a}$ And thou shalt brynge Aaron a his sonnes vnto the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and wash them with water, a put the holy vestimentes vpon Aaron, and anoynte him, and conseerate him, that he maye be my prest. And thou shalt brynge his sonnes also, and put the albes vpon them, and anoynte them, as thou hast anoynted their father, $\frac{t}{y}$ they maye be my prestes. And this anoyntinge shall they haue for an euerlastinge presthode amonge their posterities. tAnd Moses dyd all as the LORDE comaunded him.
${ }^{\circ}$ Thus was the Tabernaele set vp in the seconde yeare vpon the first daye of the first moneth. And whan Moses reared it rp, he fastened $\dot{y}$ sokettes and the bordes, and barres, and set vp the pilers, and spred out the tent oner the Habitacion, and put the couerynge of the tent aboue an hye, as the LORDE commaunded him. And he toke the wytnesse, and layed it in the Arke, and put $\dot{y}$ staues in the Arke, and set the Mercyseate aboue ypon the [^114]Arke, and brought the Arke in to the Habitacion, and hanged the vayle before the Arke of wytnesse, as the LORDE commaunded him.

And he set the table in the Tabernacle of wytnesse, in the corner of the Habitacion vpon the north syde without the vayle, and prepared bred theron before $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE $\ddagger$ as the LORDE commaunded him.

And he set in the candilsticke also, euen ouer agaynst the table, in the corner of the Habitacion vpon the south syde, and put the lampes theron before ${ }^{\circ}$ LORDE, as the LORDE commaunded him. And the golden altare set he in also before the vayle, and brent swete incense theron, as the LORDE commaunded him. And hanged rp the hangynge in the Tabernacle dore. As for the altare of burntofferynges, he set it before the dore of the Habitacion of ${ }^{8}$ Tabernacle of wytuesse, and offred burntofferynges and meate offerynges theron, as the LORDE commaunded him.
${ }^{\text {c }}$ And the Lauer set he betwixte the Tabernacle of wytnesse and $\dot{y}$ altare, and put water therin to wash withall. And Moses, Aaron and his sonnes washed their hādes and fete ther at: for they ought to wash the , whan they wente in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse, or whan they wente vnto the altare, as the LORDE commaunded him.

And he set vp the courte rounde aboute the Habitacion and the altare, and hanged vp $\dot{y}$ hanginge in $\dot{y}$ courte gate. Thus Moses fynished the whole worke.

Then a cloude couered $\dot{y}$ 'Tabernacle of wytnesse, and the glory of the LORDE fylled the Habitacion. And Moses coulde not go in to the Tabernaele of wytnesse, whyle the cloude abode theron, and the glory of $\dot{y}$ LORDE fylled the Habitacion.

And whan the eloude remoned from the Habitacion, then wente the children of Israel forth, as oft as they toke their iourney. But yf the cloude remoned not, then toke not they their iourney, tyll the daie that it remoned: for in the daye tyme was the cloude of the LORDE vpon the Habitacion, $t$ in the might season was fyre therin, in $\dot{y}$ sight of all $\dot{y}$ house of Israel, in all their iourneis.

As for the fat and the kydneys a the net vpon the leuer of the synofferynge, he burnt the vpon the altare, as the LORDE commaunded Moses. The flesh also and the hyde burnt he with fyre without the hoost.
Afterwarde he slewe the burntofferinge, and Aarons sonnes brought the bloude vnto him, a he sprenkled it rounde aboute rpon the altare. And they brought him the burntofferynge in peces, © the heade : © he burnt it vpon the altare. And he washed the bowels and the legges, and burnt them aboue vpon the burntofferynge on the altare.
${ }^{\text {c Then brought }}$ he the offerynge of the people, and toke the goate, that synofferynge of the people, and slewe it, and made a synofferynge therof, as of the fyrst. Afterwarde slewe he the oxe and the ramme for the healthofferynge of the people. And his sonnes brought him the bloude, which he sprenkled ypon the altare rounde aboute. But the fat of the oxe of the ramme, the rompe, and the fat that couereth the bowels, a the kydneyes, a the net vpon the leuer, all soch fat laied they vpon the brest, and burnt the fat vpon the altare. But the brest and the ${ }^{a}$ right shulder waued Aaron for a Waueofferynge before the LORDE, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

And Aaron lift up his hāde ouer the people, and blessed them, and came downe from the worke of the synofferynge, burntofferynge, and healthofferynge. And Moses and Aaron wente in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And whan they came out agayne, they blessed the people. Then appeared the glory of the LORDE vnto all the people. For there came *a fyre from the LORDE, and vpon the altare it consumed the burntofferynge and the fat. Whan all the people sawe that, they reioysed, and fell tpon their faces.

AND ${ }^{\circ}$ sonnes of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, ${ }^{b}$ toke ether of thē his censoure, a put fyre therin, a layed incense vpon it, and brought straunge fyre before the LORDE, ${ }^{+}$which he commauded them not. Then wente there out a fyre from $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE, and consumed them, so that they dyed before the LORDE. Then sayde Moses vnto Aaron: This is it, that the LORDE sayde: I wil be sanctified vpo them that come nye me, and before all the people wil I be glorified. And Aaron helde his peace.

Moses called Misael and Elzaphan the sonnes of Vsiel Aarons vncle, and sayde rnto them: Go to, and cary youre brethren ont of the Sanctuary, without the hoost. And they wente, and earied them forth in their albes without the hoost, as Moses sayde.

Then sayde Moses vnto Aaron a to his sonnes Eleasar and Ithamar: $\ddagger \mathrm{Ye}$ shall not vncouer youre heades, ner rente youre clothes, that ye dye not, and the wrath come vpon the whole congregacion: Let youre brethre of the whole house of Israel bewepe this burnynge, which the LORDE hath done. As for you, ye shall not go out from the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, lest ye dye : for the anoynt-[^123]inge oyle of the LORDE is ypon you. And they dyd as Moses sayde.

The LORDE spake vnto Aaron, a sayde: - Thou th thy sonnes with the shal drynke no wyne ner stronge drynke, whan ye go in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse: that ye dye not. Let this be a perpetuall lawe vnto all youre posterities: $\dot{y}^{t}$ ye maye hane knowlege to discerne, what is holy and vnholy, what is cleane a moleane: a that ye maye teach the children of Israel all the lawes, which the LORDE hath spoken vnto you by Moses.

And Moses sayde mnto Aaron, and vnto Eleasar and Ithamar his sonnes that were left: ${ }^{d}$ Take the remnaunt of the meatofferynge in the sacrifices of $\hat{y}$ LORDE, and eate it without lenen besyde the altare, for it is most holy, euen in the holy place shal ye eate it. For it is thy dutye and thy sonnes dutye in the sacrifices of the LORDE: for thus am I commaunded. But the Wauebrest and the Heueshulder shalt thou eate, and thy sonnes and thy doughters with the in a cleane place. For this dutye is geuen vnto the and thy children in the deedofferynges of the children of Israel. For the Heueshulder and the Wanebrest to the offerynges of the fat, shalbe brought in, that they maye be waued for a Waueofferinge before the LORDE. Therfore is it thine and thy childrens for a perpetuall dutye, as the LORDE commaunded.

And Moses sought for the goate of the synofferynge, and founde it burnt. And he was angrie at Eleasar and Ithamar $\mathfrak{y}$ sonnes of Aaron, which were left alyue, and sayde: Wherfore have ye not eaten the synofferynge in the holy place? for it is most holy, a he hath geuen it you, that ye might beare $y$ synne of the eōgregacion, to make agremét for them before the LORDE. Beholde, the bloude of it came not in to the Sanctuary: Ye shulde haue eaten it in the Sanctuary, as I was commaunded.

Aaron sayde vnto Moses: Beholde, this daye haue they offred their synofferynge a their burntofferynge before $\dot{y}$ LORDE. And it is chaunsed me after this maner. And shulde I eate of the synofferynge to daye, a be mery before the LORDE? Whan Moses herde that, he was content.

AND y LORDE spake vnto Moses a Aaron, a sayde: Whan there ryseth vp eny thinge in the skynne of a mans flesh, whether it be a scabbe or a glistrynge whyte (as though there wolde be a leprosy in $\dot{y}$ szkynne of his flesh) he shal be brought vnto Aaron the prest, or to one of his sonnes amonge $y^{\circ}$ prestes. And whan the prest seyth the plage vpon the szkynne of the flesh, that the hayres are turned to whyte, and it seme deper in that place then the other szkynne of his flesh, then is it surely a leprosy, therfore shal the prest loke vpon him, and iudge him vncleane.

But whan there is eny whyte plecke in the szkynne of his flesh, and yet seme no deper then the other szkynne of the flesh, and the hayres be not turned to whyte, the shal the prest shut him vp seuen dayes, and on $\dot{y}$ seuenth daye loke vpon him: yf the plage seme vnto him as afore, a hath frett no deper in the sakynne, then shall the prest shut him vp yet seuen dayes mo. And whan he loketh on him agayne rpon the seuenth daye, and fyndeth, that the plage be darkish, and hath frett no deper in the szkynne, the shal he iudge him cleane, for it is but a szkyrfe, and he shal wash his clothes, $\pi$ then is he cleane.

But whan the scabbe fretteth farther in the szkynne (after that he is sene of the prest, and iudged cleane) and he be now sene of the prest agayne: whan the prest seyth thé, $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{}$ the scabbe hath frett farther in the szkynne, he shal iudge him vocleane, for it is surely a leprosy.

Whan a plage of leprosy is rpo a man, he shalbe brought vnto the prest. Whan he seyth and fyndeth, that there is whyte rysen vp in the szkynne, and the hayre turned vnto whyte, and there be rawe flesh in the sore, + Luc. 2. d. beuit. 5. b.

thè is it surely an olde leprosy in $\mathfrak{y}$ szkynne of his flesh, therfore shal the prest iudge him vncleane, and not shut him vp, for he is vncleane allready.

But whan the leprosy breaketh out in the szkynne, and couereth the whole szkynne, from the heade vnto the fote, all that the prest can se, So whan the prest loketh vpon it, and fyndeth, that $\dot{y}$ leprosy hath couered all the flesh, he shal iudge him cleane, for so moch as it is turned all in to whyte vpon him, for he is cleane.

Notwithstōdinge yf there be rawe flesh there, in the daye whan he is loked vpon, the is he vncleane. And whan the prest seyth $\dot{y}$ rawe flesh, he shall iudge him vncleane, for he is vncleane, $\tau$ it is surely a leprosye. But yf the rawe flesh chaunge agayne, and be turned in to whyte, then shall he come vnto the prest. And whan the prest loketh ypon him, and fyndeth, that the plage is turned to whyte, he shall iudge him cleane, for he is cleane.

Whan there is a byle in the szkynne of eny mans flesh, and healeth agayne, and afterwarde in the same place there aryse vp eny whyte thinge, or a glisterynge whyte som what reedish, he shal be sene of the prest. So whan the prest, seyeth, that it appeareth to be lower then the other szkymne, and the hayre turned to whyte, then shall he iudge him vncleane, for it is surely a plage of leprosye broken out of the byle. But yf the prest se and fynde, that the hayres are not whyte, and it not lower then the other szkynne, and is darkysh, he shal shat him vp seuen dayes. Yf it hath frett farther in the szkynne, then shal he iudge him vncleane, for it is surely a plage of leprosye. But yf the glysterynge whyte abyde styll, and freate no farther, the is it but a prynte of the byle, and the prest shal iudge him cleane.

Whan the szkynne of eny mans flesh is hurt with fyre, and the prynte of the burninge be reedysh or whyte, and the prest loketh vpon him, and fyndeth the hayre turned to whyte ypon the mark of the burnynge, $\sigma$ it apeare deper then the other szkynne, the is there surely a leprosy brokē out of $\hat{y}$ pryate of $\hat{y}$ burnynge: therfore shal $\hat{y}$ prest iudge hī vncleane, for it is a plage of leprosye. But yf the prest se and fynde, that $y$ hayre vpon the prynte of the burninge is not turned vito whyte, $\mathbb{a}$ is no lower then the other skynne, and is darkish also, he shall shut him vp seuen dayes.

And ypon the seuenth daye he shall loke vpon him: yf it hath frett farther in $y$ skyme, then shal he iudge him vncleane, for it is a leprosy. But yf it stōde styll vpō the mark of the burnynge, and frett no farther in the szkynne, and is darkysh, then is it a sore in $\hat{y}$ mark of the burnynge, a the prest shal iudge him cleane, for it is but the prynte of the burnynge.

Whan a man or woman is skyruye vpon the heade or beerd, and the prest seyth the mark, and fyudeth that it appeareth deper then the other skynne, and the hayre be there goldē and thynne, then shal he iudge him vncleane: for it is a skyrfe of leprosy of the heade or of the beerde. But yf the prest se that $\dot{y}$ skyrfe apeare no deper the the skynne, and that the hayre is not of a pale coloure, he shall shut him rp senē dayes. And $\mathrm{vp} \overline{0}$ the seuenth daye whan he loketh, and fyndeth, that the skyrfe hath frett no farther, and there be no golden hayre there, and that the skyrfe appeare no deper then the other skynne, then let him be shauen : but so that he shaue not of the scabbe, and the prest shall shut him vp yet seuen dayes moo. And vpon the seuēth daye whà he loketh, and fyndeth that the skyrfe hath frett no farther in the skynne, and that it apeareth no deper then the other skynne, then shall the prest iudge him cleane. And he shall wash his clothes, for he is cleane. But yf the scabbe freate farther in the skyme (after $\frac{t}{y}$ he is iudged cleane) and the prest loketh, and fyndeth, that $\dot{y}$ scabbe hath frett farther in the skynne, then shal he seke nomore for golden hayres, for he is vncleane. Neuerthelesse yf he se that the seabbe stondeth styll, $\tau$ that pale hayres are there rysen yp , then is $\dot{y}$ seabbe hole, and he is cleane, therfore shall $y ̊$ prest iudge him to be cleane.

Whā there is eny glisteringe whyte vpo $\bar{y}$ skyme of the flesh of a man or woman, and the prest seyth there that the glisterynge whyte vanysheth: then is it but a whyte scabbe rysen up in $\dot{y}$ skyme, a he is cleane.

Whan the hayres fall out of the heade of a man or a woman, so that he is balde, the same is cleane. Yf they fall out of his fore heade, then is he fore heade balde acleane. But yf there be a whyte reedish sore in the balde heade, or balde fore heade, then is there a leprosy rysen $\mathbf{v p}$ in the balde heade or balde foreheade: therfore shal $\stackrel{8}{2}$ prest loke vpon him. And whan he fyndeth the whyte reedysh sore rysen vp in lis balde heade or balde fore heade, then shal $\dot{y}$ skynne of the flesh be as leporous, therfore is he a leporous man and vneleane. And the prest shall iudge him vncleane, because of $\dot{y}$ same sore $\mathrm{vp} \overline{0}$ his headle.

Who so now is leporous, his clothes shal be rent, and the heade bare, a the lippes moffled, and shall in eny wyse be called vncleane. ${ }^{a}$ And as longe as the sore is vpon him, he shal be vncleane, dwell alone, and haue his dwellinge without the hoost.

Whan the plage of leprosy is in a cloth, whether it be wollen or lynnen, in the warpe or weft, whether it be lynnen or wollen, or in a skynne, or in eny maner thynge that is made of skynne. And whan $y^{\circ}$ plage is pale or reedish in the cloth or skynne, either in the warpe or weft, or in eny maner thinge that is made of skynne, the same is surely the plage of leprosy, therfore shall the prest loke vpon it. And whan he seyth the plage, he shal shut it vp seuen dayes. And vpon the seuèth daye whan he seyth that $\dot{y}$ plage hath frett farther in the cloth, in the warpe or weft, in a skynne or in eny maner thinge that is made of skynne, then is it a fretinge plage of leprosye, and is vncleane. And the cloth shal be burnt, either warpe or weft, whether it be wollen or lynnē, or eny thynge made of skynne, wherin is eny soch plage. For it is a plage of leprosy, and shal be burnt with fyre.

But yf the prest se that the plage hath frete no farther in $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ cloth, either in the warpe or weft, or eny thinge made of skynne, then shal he commaunde to wash the thinge that the plage is in, and shall shut it up other seuen dayes. And whan the prest seyth (after that the plage is waszshen) $\dot{y}$ the plage is not chaüged before his eyes, and hath frett no farther also, yet is it vncleane, a shal be burnt with fyre: for it is depe fretē inwarde, and hath made skyrfes. Neuertheles whan the prest seyth that the prynte is vanyshed after the washinge of it, then shall he rente it out of the clothe, and of the skynne, out of the warpe or weft. But yf it appeare eny more in the clothe (either in the warpe, or in the weft) or eny maner thinge made of skynne, [^125]then is it a waxinge plage: and with fyre shal it be burnt that eny soch plage is in. As for the cloth, either warpe or weft, or eny maner thynge made of skynne that is waszshē, and the plage be departed from it, it shalbe waszshen once agayne, a then is it cleane.

This is the lawe ouer the plage of leprosy in clothes, whether they be wollen or lynne (ether in the warpe or in the weft) and in eny maner of thinge made of skynne, to iudge them cleane or vncleane.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: This is the lawe ouer $\dot{b}$ leper, whan he shalbe elensed. * He shall come vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ prest, and the prest shal go out of the hoost, and loke how the plage of leprosye is healed ypon the leper. And he shal commaunde him that is to be clensed, to take two lyuinge byrdes, which are cleane, and Ceder wodd, and purple woll, and ysope: and shall commaunde the one byrde to be kylled in an eartlien vessell ouer sprynginge water. And he shall take the lyuynge byrde with the Ceder wodd, the purple woll, and ysope, and dyppe them in the bloude of the slaine byrde vpon the springynge water, and sprenkle it seuen tymes rpon him that must be clensed from $\mathrm{\circ}$ leprosy. And so clense him, and let the lyuynge byrde flye at libertye in to the felde.

But he that is clensed, shal wash his clothes, and shaue of all his hayre, and bathe him self with water, so is he cleane. Afterwarde let him go in to the hoost, yet shall he tarye without his tent seuen dayes. And vpon the seuenth daye shal he shaue of all $y$ hayre vpon his heade, ypō his beerde, vpon his browes, so that all the hayre be shauen of, and he shall wash his clothes and bathe his flesh in water, then is he cleane.

And vpo the eight daye shal he take two lambes without blemysh, and a shepe of a yeare olde without blemysh, and thre tenth deales of fyne floure for a meatofferynge, myngled with oyle, © a Logg of oyle. Thē shall the prest presente him that is clensed and these thinges before the LORDE, before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and shal take $\mathfrak{y}$ one lambe, and offre it for trespace offerynge, with the Logg of oyle, I shall wane them, before $\dot{y}$ LORDE, and afterwarde [^126]slaye the lambe, where the synofferynge and burntofferynge are slayne, namely, in the holy place. For as the synofferynge, so is the trespace offerynge the prestes also, for it is most holy.

And the prest shall take of the bloude of the trespace offerynge, and put it vpon the typpe of $\hat{y}$ right eare of him that is elesed, and xpon the thombe of his right hande, and vpon the greate too of his right fote. Afterwarde shall he take of the oyle out of the Logg, and poure it in to his awne left hande, and dyppe his right fynger in the oyle that is in his left hande, and sprenkle the oyle with his fynger seuen tymes before the LORDE. And he shall make the synofferynge, and reconcyle him that is elesed, beeause of his vnclemnesse. And afterwarde shall he sleye the burntofferynge, and shal offre it ypon the altare with the meatofferynge, and make an attonement for him, at than is he cleane.
But yf he be poore, and getteth not so moch with his hande, then let him take one lambe for a trespaceofferynge to waue it, to make an attonement for him, and a tenth deale of fyne floure myngled with oyle for a meatofferynge, and a Logg of oyle, a two turtyll doues, or two yonge pigeons whieh he is able to get with his hande, let the one be a synofferynge, the other a burntofferynge : and let him brynge them vpon the eight daye of his elensynge vnto the prest before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse before the LORDE.

Then shall the prest take the lambe for the synofferynge, and the Logg of oyle, and shall waue them all before the LORDE, and sley the lambe of the trespace offerynge : and take of $y$ bloude of the same trespaceofferynge, and put it vpon the typpe of the righte eare of him that is elensed, and ypon the thombe of his right hande, and ypon the greate too of his righte fote, and poure of the oyle in to his

As for the remnaunt of the oyle in his hande, he shal put it vpon the typpe of the right eare of him that is elensed, and vpon the thombe of his right hande, a vpon the greate too of his right fote, euen aboue vp $\bar{o} \hat{y}$ bloude of y trespaceofferynge. The other oyle in his hāde shal he poure vpó ẙ heade of him $\frac{t}{y}$ is elensed, to make an attonement for him before the LORDE. And afterwarde of the one of the turtill doues or yonge pigeons (acordinge as his handes are able to get) he shal make a synofferynge, of $\dot{y}$ other a burntofferynge, with the meatofferynge: and so shal the prest make an attonemēt for him that is elensed before the LORDE.

Let this be the lawe for the leper, whieh is not able with his hande to get, that belongeth rnto his clensyage.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses and Aaron, and sayde: Whan ye are come in to the lande of Canaan, which I geue you to possesse: and yf there happen a plage of leprosy in any house of youre possession, then shal he that owneth the house, come and tell the prest, and saye: Me thynke there is as it were a plage of leprosy in my house. Then shal the prest commaunde to rydde all thynge out of the house or euer the prest go in to se $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ plage, lest all that is in the house be made vneleane. Afterwarde shall y prest go in, to se the plage.

Now whan he loketh, and fyndeth, $y$ there be holowe strakes yalowe or reedish in the walles of the house, a they seme to be lower then the wall besyde, then shall he go out at the dore of the house, and shut vp the house for senen dayes. And ypon the seuenth daye whan he commeth, and seyth that the plage hath fretten farther in the walles of the house, the shall he commaunde to breake out the stones wherin the plage is, a to cast the in a foule place without the cite, $\frac{1}{}$ the house to be seraped within rounde aboute, and the dust $\hat{y}$ is seraped of, to be poured without $\hat{y}$ eite in an vncleane place, $\tau$ to take other stones, and put them in the place of the other, and to take other playster, and playster the house.

Whan the plage then commeth agayne, and breaketh forth in the house, after $\dot{y}$ the stones are broke out, the playster seraped of, and the house playsterd of the new, the shal the prest go in : and whan he seyth that the plage hath fretten farther in the house, then is there surely a fretinge leprosy in the house, and it is vncleane: therfore shal the house be broken downe, both the stones, and y tymber and all the dust of the house, and shal be caried out of the eite in to an vneleane place. And who so goeth in to the house, whyle it is shut vp, is vncleane vntyll $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ euen. And he ${ }^{\mathrm{t}}$ lyeth therin, or eateth therin, shal wash his elothes.

But yf the prest se (whā he goeth in) that this plage hath frett no farther in the house, after that the house is new playsterd, the shal he indge it to be cleane, for the plage is healed. And to a synofferinge for the house, he shal take two byrdes, Ceder wodd, a purple woll, and ysope, and slaye the one byrde in an erthen vessell ipon sprynginge water, and shall take the Ceder wodd, the purple woll, the ysope, and the lyuinge byrde, a dyppe them in the bloude of the slayne byrde rpon the sprynginge water, and sprenkle the house with all seuẽ tymes: and so shal he purifie the house with the bloude of the byrde, with the springinge water, with the lyuinge byrde, with the Ceder wodd, with the ysope, and with the purple woll. And the lyuynge byrde shall he let flye at libertye out of the towne in to the felde, a make an attonement for the house, and then is it cleane.

This is the lawe ouer all maner plage of leprosye a skyrfe, ouer $\mathfrak{y}$ leprosye of elothes and of houses, ouer sores, scabbes, and glisterynge whyte, that it maye be knowne, whan eny thinge is vncleane or cleane. This is $\dot{y}$ lawe of leprosy.

AND the LORDE talked with Moses and Aaron, and sayde: Speake to the children of Israel, and saie vnto him: Whan a man hath a runnynge yssue from out of his Hesh, $y$ same is moleane: but the is he vncleane by the reason of this yssue, whan his flesh is fretten of $\dot{y}$ yssue or wounde. Enery bed where on he lyeth, a what so euer he sytteth vpon, shalbe vneleane.

And he that toucheth his bed shall wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vneleane vityll the euen.

And he $\frac{t}{y}$ sytteth where he sat, shal wash his elothes, and bathe him self with water, and be rucleane vntyll the eue. Who so toucheth his flesh, shall wash his clothes, a bathe him self with water, and be vncleane vntyll the euen. Whan he spytteth rpon him that is cleane, $\hat{y}$ same shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, a be vncleane vntyll the euen.

Aud the saddell and what so euer he rydeth vpō, shalbe vncleane. And who so euer toucheth eny thinge that hath bene vnder him, shalbe vncleane vntyll the euen. And who so beareth eny soch, shall wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vncleane vatyll the euen. And whom so euer he toucheth, and washeth not his handes first, the same shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vncleane vntyll the euen. *Whan he toucheth an erthen vessell, it shal be broken: but the treen vessell shal be rensed with water. And what he is cleane of his yssue, he shal nombre vij. dayes, after $\dot{y}$ he is made cleane, a wash his elothes, a bathe him self with sprynginge water, the is he cleane. Aud vpon the eight daye shal he take two turtill doues or two yonge pigeōs, and bryage them before the LORDE before the dore of the 'Tabernacle of wytnesse, and gene them vnto the prest. And the prest shal make of the one a synofferinge, of the other a burntofferynge, and make an attonement for him before the LORDE, as coneernynge his yssue.

Whan a mans sede departeth from him in $\mathbb{C}$ slepe, the same shal bathe all his flesh with water, and be vncleane vntyll the euen. And all clothes, and euery skynne that is stained with soch sede, shall he wash with water, t be vneleane vityll the euen. A woman, by whom soch one lyeth, shall bathe hir self with water, and be meleane vntyll the euen.

Whan a woman hath the bloude yssue of hir flesh, she shalbe put a parte vij. daies in to a sundrie place. Who so euer toucheth her, shal be vincleane vityll the eue. And all that she lyeth ypon (as longe as she is put aparte) shalbe vieleane. And that she sytteth rpos, shalbe vneleane. And who so ener toucheth hir bed, shal wash his elothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vneleane intyll the euen. And who so euer toucheth eny maner thinge that she hath sytten vpo, shal wash his elothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vneleane vntyll the eue.

[^127]${ }^{a}$ And yf a man lye with her (whyle she is put a parte) he shalbe vneleane seuen dayes, and the bed that he laye vpon, shalbe vncleane.
${ }^{6}$ But whan a woman hath hir bloude yssue a longe season, not onely at the tyme of hir naturall course, but also out of the tyme of hir naturall course, then shall she be vncleane so longe as she hath the yssue: eue as she is at the tyme whan she is put aparte, so shall she be vncleane here also. What so ener she lyeth vpon all the tyme of hir yssue, shalbe as hir bed, whan she is put aparte. And all that she sytteth vpon, shalbe vneleane, as is hir vnelennesse, whan she is put aparte. Who so euer toucheth eny of them, shal be moleane, and shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, a be meleane untyll the euen.

But yf she be cleane of hir yssue, the shal she nombre seuen dayes, afterwarde shall she be cleane: and vpon the eight daye shall she take two turtill doues, or two yonge pigeons, and brynge them vnto the prest before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And the prest shall make of the one a synofferynge, of the other a burntofferynge, and make an attonement for her before the LORDE, as concernynge the yssue of hir rnclennesse.

Thus shal ye se that the childre of Israel kepe them selues from their vnclenesse, that they dye not in their vnclemnesse, whan they defyle my habitacion, which is amōge you.

This is the lawe ouer him that hath a runnynge sore, $\pi$ him whose sede departeth from him in slepe, so that he is vneleane therof. And ouer her that hath hir bloude yssue, and who so euer hath a runnynge sore, whether it be man or woman, and whan a man lyeth with her that is vncleane.

${ }^{3} Y^{1}$F ye wyll walke now in my statutes, ${ }^{a}$ and kepe my commaundementes and do them, the wyl I geue you rayne in due season, and $\hat{y}$ londe shal geve hir increase, and the trees of $y$ felde shal brynge forth their frute. And the threszshinge tyme shall reache vnto the wyne harnest, and the wyne haruest shal reache minto the sowynge tyme. And ye shall eate youre bred in plenteonsnes, and shal dwell safe in youre londe. I wil geve peace in youre londe, so that ye shall slepe, and no man shall make you afrayed. I wyl ryd euell beestes out of youre londe, and there shall no swerde go thorow youre londe.

Ye shal chace youre enemies, a they shal fall in to $\dot{y}$ swerde before you. $\quad+$ Fyue of you shal chace an hundreth: and an hundreth of you shal chace ten thousande. For youre enemies shall fall in to the swerde before you. And I wyl turne me vnto you, and wyl cause you to growe and increase, and wyl set rp my couenaunt with you. And ye shal eate of the olde stoare, and shall let go the olde for plenteousnesse of the new. $\ddagger$ I will haue my dwellynge amonge you, and my soule shall not refuse you. And I wyll walke amonge you, and wyl be youre God, and ye shalbe iny people. For I am the LORDE youre God, which brought you out of the londe of Egipte, that ye shulde not be their bondmen. And I have broke the cepter of youre yocke, and caused you to go vp right.

And I wyl set my face agaynst you, and ye $\mathfrak{C}$ shal be slayne before youre enemies. And they that hate you, shal haue dominion ouer you. §And ye shall flye, whī no man chaseth you.

But yf ye wyll not herken vnto me for all this, then wyl I make it yet seuen tymes more, to punysh you for youre synnes, that I maye breake $\dot{y}$ pryde of youre strength, and wyl make youre heauen lyke yron, and youre earth as brasse: and youre trauaile and laboure shal be but lost, so that youre londe shall not geue hir increase, and the trees in the londe shal not brynge forth their frute.

If ye walke yet agaynst me, and wyll not harken vnto me, then wyl I make it yet seuen tymes more, to punysh you because of youre symnes: a wyl sende wylde beestes amōge you, which shal robbe you, and destroie youre eatell, and make you fewer, and youre hye waye shal become waist.

But yf ye wyl not yet be refoumed here withall, and wyll walke contrary vnto me, then wyl I wake contrary vnto you also, a wyll punysh you yet seuen tymes for youre symnes. And I wyl brynge vpon you a swerde of vengeaunce, which shall auenge my Testament. And though ye gather you together in to youre cities, yet wyll I sende the pestilence amonge you, and wyll delyuer you in to the handes of youre enemies. For I wil destroye youre prouysion of bred, so $\frac{t}{y}$ ten wemen shall bake youre bred in one ouen, and youre bred shal be delyuered out by weight. IAnd whan ye eate, ye shall not haue ynough.

If ye wyl not yet for all this harken unto me, a wyl walke contrary vnto me, then wyll I also walke cōtrary vnto you in wrathfull displeasure, and wyll punysh you seuenfolde because of youre synnes, so that ye shal eate the flesh of youre sonnes and doughters. And I wyl destroye youre hye altares, and rote out youre ymages, and wyll cast youre bodies rpon the bodies of youre Idols, and my soule shall abhorre you. And youre cities wyll I make [^139]|waist, and brynge youre churches to naught, and wyll not smell youre swete odoures.

Thus wyll I make the londe desolate, so that youre enemies shall dwell therin, and make it waist: but you will I scater amonge the Heythen, and drawe out the swerde after you, so that youre londe shal be waist, a youre cities desolate.

Then shall the londe reioyse in hir Sabbathes, as longe as it lyeth wayst, and ye be in the enemies londe. Yee then shal the londe kepe holy daye, and reioyse in hir rest, as longe as it lieth wayst, because it coude not rest in youre Sabbathes, whan ye dwelt therin.

And as for them that remayne of you, I wyll make them faynte harted in the londe of their enemies, so that a shakynge leaf shall chace them. And they shall flye from it, as though a swerde persecuted them, and shal fall noman folowynge ypon them. And they shall fall one vpon another (as it were before the swerde) and noman yet clacynge them. And ye shall not be so bolde, as to withstonde youre enemies, and shal perishe amonge the Heithen, and the londe of youre enemies shal eate you sp .

And they that are left of you, shall pyne awaye in their myszlede, euen in the enemies londe, and in the myszdedes of their fathers shall they consume awaye. Then shall they knowlege their myszdedes, and the myszdedes of their fathers in the trespace, wherwith they hane trespaced agaynst me, and walked contrary vato me. Therfore wyll I also walke contrary vnto thē, and wyll brynge them in to the enemies londe.
Then shal their rneircumeysed herte be tamed. And then shall they ende their myszdedes. ${ }^{\text {and }}$ And I shal thinke vpō my conenañt with Lacob, and ypon my couenaunt with Isaac, and vpon my couenaunt with Abraham, and wyl thynke ypon the löde. The childre of Nephthali, their kynreds and generacions after their fathers houses in the nombre of the names, from twentye yeare a aboue, all that were able to go forth vinto the warre, were nombred to the trybe of Nephthali, thre and fiftie thousande and foure hundreth.

These are they whom Moses and Aaron nombred with $\dot{y}^{8}$ twolue prynces of Israel, wherof euery one was ouer $\dot{y}$ house of their fathers. *And the summe of the children of Israel after their fathers houses, from twentye yeare and aboue (what so euer was able to go forth to the warre in Israel) was sixe C. thousande, thre thousande, fyne C. a fiftie. But the Louites after the trybe of their fathers, were not nombred amonge them.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and saide: The trybe of Leui shalt thou not nombre, ner take the summe of them amonge $\dot{y}$ children of Israel: but shalt appoynte them to the Habitacion of wytnesse, and to all $\hat{y}$ apparell therof, and to all that belongeth therto. + And they shall beare the Tabernacle s all the ordinaunce therof, and shal wayte vpon it, and shal pitch their tentes rounde aboute it. And whan men shal go on their iourney, the Leuites shal take downe y y Tabernacle. And whan the hoost pitch their tetes, they shal set vp the Tabernacle. And yf a straunger preasse nye vnto it, he shall dye. The children of Israel shal pitch their tentes, euery one in his awne armye, and by the baner of his awne companye. But the Leuites shall pitch rounde aboute the Tabernacle of wytnesse, that there come no wrath rpon $\dot{y}$ congregacion of the children of Israel: therfore shal the Leuites wayte vpon the Habitacion of wytnesse. And the children of Israel dyd all, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

THESE are the generacions of Aaron a Moses, whan $\dot{y}$ LORDE spake vnto Moses at $\dot{y}$ same tyme vpon mount Sinai. And these are $\dot{y}$ names of the sonnes of Aron. ${ }^{a}$ The firstborne, Nadab: then Abihu, Eleasar of Ithamar. These are $\hat{y}$ names of the sonnes of Aaron, + which were anoynted to be prestes, $\pi$ their handes fylled for ${ }^{\circ}$ presthode. ${ }^{b}$ But Nadab « Abihu dyed before y LORDE, whä they offred straūge fyre before y LORDE, in y wildernesse of Sinai, $\mathbb{t}$ had no sonnes. But Eleasar and Ithamar executed ý prestes office with their father Aaron.
${ }^{c}$ And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, a sayde: Bringe hither the trybe of Leui, and set them before Aaron the prest, $\frac{t}{y}$ they maye serue with him, at wayte vpon him at rpo the whole congregacion before y Tabernacle of witnesse, and execute the seruyce of the habitacion, and kepe all the apparell of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and wayte ypon the children of Israel, to mynistre in the seruyce of the habitacion.

And thou shalt geue yo Leuites vnto Aaron and his sonnes for a gift, vnto euery one his awne, from amonge the children of Israel. As for Aaron a his sonnes, thou shalt appoynte them to wayte on their prestes office. $\ddagger \mathrm{Yf}$ another preasse therto, he shal dye.
$$$ And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and

[^144]saide: Beholde, I haue takē the Leuites frō amonge the childrē of Israel, for all the first borne that open the Matrix amonge the children of Israel, so that the Leuites shalbe myne. \|For the firstborne are myne, sence y tyme that I smote all the first borne in $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ lande of Egipte, whā I sanctified vnto me all the first borne in Israel, from mé wnto catell, that they shulde be myne. I the LORDE.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses in the wyldernesse of Sinai, and sayde: Nombre the children of Levi after their fathers houses and kynreds, all that are males of a moneth olde and aboue.

So Moses nombred them acordinge to the worde of the LORDE, as he had commaunded. And these were the children of Leui with their names: ${ }^{d}$ Gerson, Kahath, Merari. The names of the children of Gerson in their kynreds, were: Libni and Semei.

The childre of Kahath in their kynreds were, Amram, Iezehar, Hebron and Vsiel.

The children of Merari in their kynreds, were Maheli and Musi. These are the kymreds of Leui after their fathers houses.

These are yf kynreds of Gerson: The Libnites and Semeites, the summe was founde in nombre, seuen thousande and fyue hundreth, of all that were males of a moneth olde and aboue. And the same kynreds of the Gersonites shal pitche behinde the Habitacion on the west syde: Let Eliasaph the sonne of Lael be their ruler. And they shal waite ypon the Tabernacle of wytnesse, of the habitacion, and of the tent, and couerynges therof, and the hangynge in the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, the hangynge aboute the courte, a the hangynge in y courtedore, which (courte) goeth aboute the habitacion and the altare, and the cordes of it, $九$ all that belongeth to the seruyce therof.

These are the kynreds of Kahath: The Amramites, the Iezeharites, the Hebronites, and Vsielites, all that were males of a moneth olde $\pi$ aboue, in nombre eight thousande and sixe hundreth, waytinge vpon the Tabernacle of the Sanctuary, a shal pitch on the south syde of $\dot{y}$ Habitacion: Let Elisaphan the sonne of Vsiel be their ruler. And they shal kepe the Arke, the table, the candilsticke, the altare and all the vessels of the Sanctuary, [^145]to do seruyce in, and the vayle, and all that belongeth to the sermice therof. But the chefe of all the rulers of the Leuites, shalbe Eleasar the sonne of Aron the prest, ouer them that are apoynted to kepe the watch of the Sanctuary.

These are y kynreds of Merari: The Mahelites and Musites, which were in nombre sixe thousande and two hūdreth, all that were males of a moneth olde and abone: Let Zuriel y some of Abihail be their ruler, and they shall pitche rpon the north syde of the Habitacion. And their office shalbe to kepe the bordes, and barres, and pilers, and sokettes of the Habitacion, and all the apparell therof and that serueth therto: $\dot{y}$ pilers also aboute $\dot{y}$ courte, with the sokettes, and nales, and cordes.

But before the Habitacion and before $\dot{y}$ Tabernacle on the East syde shal Moses a Aaron $\pi$ his sonnes pytche, that they maye wayte vpon the Sanctuary, at the children of Israel. *If eny other preasse therto, he shal dye.
${ }^{a}$ All the Leuites in the summe, whom Moses and Aaron nombred after their kynreds, acordinge to the worde of the LORDE, all that were males, of a moneth olde and aboue, were two and twentye thousande.

And ẙ LORDE saide vnto Moses: Nombre all the first borne, that are males amonge the children of Israel, of a moneth olde and aboue, and take the nombre of their names. ${ }^{b}$ And $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ Lenites shalt thou take out vato me the LORDE, for all $\stackrel{\circ}{ }$ first borne of y childrē of Israel, $x$ the catell of the Leuites for all the first borne amonge the catell of $\hat{y}$ children of Israel. And Moses nombred all the first borne amōge the childre of Israel, as the $\$$ LORDE commaunded him. And in the nombre of the names of all the first borne, that were males of a moneth olde a aboue, in their summe, there were foude two and twentye thousande, two hundreth, and thre and senentye.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, a sayde: Take the Leuites for all $\hat{y}$ first borne amonge the childre of Israel, a the catell of $\dot{y}$ Lenites for their catell, $\stackrel{ \pm}{y}$ the Leuites maye be myne the LORDES. ${ }^{c}$ But the redempcion money of the tro hundreth thre senentye if remayne of the first borne of the children

AND the LORDE spake mnto Moses a Aaron, a sayde: Take $\hat{y}$ summe of the childree of Kahath from amonge the childree of Leui, after their kynreds a fathers houses $\ddagger$ from thirtie yeare and aboue vntill fiftye yeare, all that are mete for the warre, that they maye do the worke in the Tabernacle of witnesse. This shal be the office of the children of Kahath in the Tabernacle of wytnesse, which is most holy.

Whan the hoost breaketh vp, Aaron and his sommes shall go in, and take downe the vayle, and couer the Arke of wytnesse therwith, and laye the couerynge of doo skynnes vpon it, and sprede a whole yalowe clothe abone theron, and put his staues therin. And ypon the shewe table they shal sprede a yalowe elothe also, and set theron the disshes, spones, flatpeces and pottes to poure out and in, and the daylie bred shal lye vpon it, and they shall sprede a purple clothe therouer, and couer it with a couerynge of doo skynnes, and put the staues of it therin.

And they shal take a yalowe clothe, and coner the eadilsticke of light therwith, and his lampes, with his snoffers and outquenchers, and all the oyle vessels that belonge to the sernyce, and aboute all this shal they put a couerynge of doo skynnes, and put it vpon stanes.

So shal they sprede a yalowe clothe ouer the golden altare also, and couer the same with a couerynge of doo skynnes, and put it ypon staues. All the vessels that they occupye in the Sanctuary, shal they take, and put a [^147]yalowe clothe ther ouer, a couer them with a conerynge of doo skynnes, and put them vpon staues. They shal swepe the asshes also from the altare, and sprede a clothe of scarlet ouer it, and set all his vessels theron, that they occupye rpon it: colepannes, fleshokes, shouels, basens, with all the apparell of the altare, and they shal sprede a couerynge of doo skynnes theron, and put his staues therto.

Now whan Aaron and his sonnes hauc done this, and have couered the Sanctuary a all the ornametes therof, whan the hoost breaketh vp, ${ }^{a}$ then shal the children of Kahath go in, that they maye beare it, and the Sanctuary shall they not touche, * lest they dye. This is the charge of the childre of Kahath in the Tabernacle of wytnesse.

And Eleasar the sonne of Aaron y prest, shal haue the office, to prepare the oyle for the light, and the spyces for the incense, and the daylie meat offerynge, and the anoyntinge oyle, to order the whole habitacion, a all that therin is, in the Sanctuary and the ornamentes therof.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses and Aaron, a sayde: Ye shal not destroye the trybe of the kynred of the Kahathites amoge the Leuites, but this shal ye do with them, $\frac{t}{y}$ they maye lyue a not dye, yf they touche the most holy. Aaron and his sonnes shal go in, and appoynte euery one vnto his office a charge. But they shal not go in, presumptuously to loke vpo $\dot{y}$ Sanctuary, lest they die. And y LORDE spake vito Moses and Aaron a sayde: Take the summe of the children of Gerson also, ${ }^{b}$ after their fathers house a kynred, from thirtye yeare a abone, vntyll fiftye yeare, os appoynte them all $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ are mete for the warre, to haue an office in the Tabernacle of wytnesse.

This shalbe the office of the kynred of the Gersonites, euē to serue a to beare. They shal beare the curtaynes of the habitacion and of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and his couerynge and the coueringe of doo skynnes, that is aboue theron, and the hanginge in the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and the hanginge aboute the courte, which goeth aboute the habitacion and the altare, and their cordes, and all the instrumentes $\dot{y}$ serue for the , and all that belongeth to their occupienge. Acordinge vato the worde of Aaron and of his sonncs, shal all the office of the children of Gerson be done, what so euer they shall beare and occupye. And ye shal se, that they wayte ypon all their charge. This shal be $y$ office of $\hat{y}$ kinred of $\frac{f}{y}$ childrē of $\hat{y}$ Gersonites in $\dot{y}$ Tabernacle of witnes. And their waytinge shal be vnder y hāde of Ithamar, the somne of Aaro the prest.

The children of Merari after their kymred and fathers house, shalt thou appoynte also, from thirtie yeare and aboue, vnto fiftie yeare, all that are mete for the warre, $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ they maye have an otfice in the Tabernacle of wytnessc. But ipon this charge shall they wayte acordinge to all their office in $\frac{\circ}{y}$ Tabernacle of witnesse, that they beare the bordes of the Habitacion, and the barres, and pilers, and sokettes: the pilers of the courte also rounde aboute, and the sokettes and nales and cordes, with all their apparell, acordynge to all their seruyce. And ynto euery one shall ye appoynte his porcion of charge to waite vpon the apparell. Let this be the office of the kynred of the children of Merari, all that they shall do in the Tabernacle of wytnesse vnder the hande of Ithamar the sonne of Aaron the prest.

And Moses and Aaron with the captaynes of the congregacion, nombred the children of y Kahathites, acordinge to their kynreds and houses of their fathers, from thirtie yeare and aboue, vntyll fyftye, all that were mete for the warre, to haue offyce in the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And the summe was, two thousande, seuen hundreth and fyftie. This is the summe of the kynred of the Kahathites (which all had sernyce in the Tabernacle of witnesse) whom Moses and Aaron nombred, acordynge to the worde of the LORDE by Moses.

The children of Gerson were nombred also in their kynreds and fathers houses from thirtie yeare and aboue vityll fyftie, all that were mete for the warre, to haue office in $\dot{y}$ Tabernacle of witnesse, and the summe was two thousande, syxe hundreth and thirtie. This is $\hat{y}$ summe of the kinred of the childre of Gerson, which all had to do in the Tabernacle of wytnesse, whom Moses and Aaron nombred, acordinge to $\stackrel{g}{y}$ worde of $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE.

The children of Merari were nombred also acordinge to their kynreds and fathers houses, [^148]from thirtie yeare and aboue vntyll fyftye, all that were mete for the warre, to haue office in the Tabernacle of witnesse, © the summe was thre thousande, and two hundreth. This is the summe of the kynred of the childre of Merari, whom Moses and Laron nombred, acordinge to the worde of the LORDE by Moses.

The summe of all the Leuites, whom Moses and Aaron with the captaynes of Istael tolde, after their kinreds and fathers houses, from thyrtie yeare and aboue vntyll fyftye, all that wente in to do euery one his office, and to beare the burthen in $\hat{y}$ Tabernacle of wytnesse, was eight thousande fyue hundreth and foure score, which were nombred acordinge to the worde of the LORDE by Moses, euery one to his office d charge, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

AND $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: Commaunde the children of 1srael, $\frac{t}{y}$ they put out of the hoost * all $\dot{y}$ lepers, and all that haue yssues, and that are defyled vpon the deed, both men and wome shall they putt out of the hoost, that they defyle not their tentes, wherin I dwell amonge them. And $\hat{y}$ children of 1 srael dyd so, and put them out of the hoost, as $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE had sayde vnto Moses.

And the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of lsrael a saye vnto them: Whan a man or woman doth a synne to eny body, and offendeth therwith agaynst the LORDE, then hath that soule a trespace vpon it. + And they shall knowlege their synne, that they hane done, and shall make amendes for their trespace, enen with the whole summe, and put ${ }^{\circ}$ fifth parte more therto, and geue it vnto him, agaynst whom they haue trespaced. But yf there be noman to make the amendes anto for the offence $\dot{y}$ he hath trespaced agaynst him, then shal the reconcylynge be made vnto the LORDE for the prest, besydes the ramme of the attonemet, wherwith he shalbe reconcyled.

Likewyse all the Heneofferynges of all that the children of Israel halowe vnto the LORDE, and offre vato the prest, shall be his. And who so haloweth eny thinge, it shalbe

And the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake to the children of Israel, and saye vnto them: Whan eny mans wife goth asyde, and trespaceth agaynst him, it eny mā lye with her fleshlye, and the thinge be yet hyd from his eyes, and is not come to light that she is defiled, and he can brynge no witnesse agaynst her (for she was not takē therin) and the sprete of gelousye kyndleth him, so that he is gelous ouer his wife: whether she be vncleane or not vncleane, then shal he brynge her vnto the prest, and brynge an offerynge for her, euen the tenth parte of an Epha of barlye meele, and shal poure no oyle theron, ner put frankensence vpon it : for it is an offerynge of gelousy, and an offeringe of remembraunce, that remembreth synne.

Then shall the prest brynge her, and sett her before the LORDE, and take of the $\ddagger$ holy water in an earthen vessell, and put of y dust that is on the floore of the habitacion, in to the water. And he shal set the wife before $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE, and vncouer hir heade, and the offeringe of remembraunce which is an offeringe of gelousy, shall he laye vpon hir handes. And the prest shal have in his hande bytter cursinge water, and shal coniure the wife, a saye vito her: Yf no man haue lyē with the, and thou hast not gone asyde from thy huszbande, to defyle thy self, then shall not these bytter cursinge waters hurte the. But yf thou hast gone asyde from thy huszbande, so that thou art defyled, and some other man hath lyen with the besyde thy huszbande, then shall the prest coniure the wife with this curse, and shal saye vnto her: The LORDE sett the to a curse and a coniuracion amonge thy people, so that the LORDE make thy thye rotte, and thy wombe to berst. So go this cursed water in to thy body, that thy wombe berst, and thy thye rotte. And the wife shal saye: Amen Amen.

So the prest shall wryte this curse in a byll, and wash it out with the water, and shall geue the wife of the bytter cursinge waters to drynke. And whā the cursinge water is gone in her, so $\dot{y}$ it is bytter rnto her then shal the prest take the gelousy offerynge out of the wyues hande, and waue it for a meatofferynge before the LORDE, and offre it vpon the

And what she hath dronken the water, yf she be defyled and haue trespaced agaynst hir huszbande, then shal the cursinge water go in to her, and be so bytter, that hir wombe shal berst, and hir thye shall rotte, and the wife shal be a curse amonge hir people. But yf the same wife be not defyled, but is eleane, then shall it do her no harme, so that she maye be with childe.

This is the lawe of gelousy, whan a wyfe goeth asyde from hir huszbande, and is defyled: Or whan y sprete of gelousy kyndleth a man, so that he is gelous ouer his wyfe, ${ }^{t}$ he brynge her before the LORDE, and that $f$ prest do all with her acordinge vnto this lawe.  ND the LORDE talked with Moses, a sayde: Speake to Aaron, a saye mito him: Whan thon settest op $\hat{y}$ lapes, thou shalt set the so, that they maye all seue geue light aboue vō $\bar{y}$ eandilsticke. And Aarondyd so, $\pi$ set $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ lampes vpō $\dot{f}$ candilsticke, as y LORDE comaunded Moses. The worke of $\mathfrak{y}$ caidilsticke was of beate golde, both $\dot{y}$ shaft a floures therof: Acordynge to $\mathrm{y}^{\circ}$ visiō that the LORDE had shewed Moses, euen so made he the candelsticke.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: Take the Leuites fro amonge the children of Israel, a clense them. But thus shalt thou do with them, that thou mayest clense them. Thou shalt sprenkle purifienge water vpon them, and lett a rasure go ouer their whole body, and washe their elothes, and then are they cleane. Then shall they take a yonge bullocke, and his meatofferynge of fyne floure myngled with oyle. And another yonge bullocke shalt thou take for a synofferinge.

And thou shalt brynge the Leuites before the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and gather together the whole congregacion of y children of Israel, and brynge the Leuytes before the LORDE. And the children of Israel shall laye their handes vpon the Leuites. And Aaron shal waue ${ }^{\circ}$ Leuites before the LORDE for the children of 1srael, that they maye mynistre in the seruyce of the LORDE.

And the Leuites shall laye their handes vpon the heedes of the bullockes, and the one shalbe made a synnofferynge, the other a burntofferinge vito the LORDE, to make an attonement for the Leuites. And thou shalt set the Leuites before Aaron and his somes, and waue them before the LORDE, and so shalt thou separate them from $\mathfrak{y}$ children of Israel, that they maye be myne. The shall they go in, that they maye do seruyce in the Tabernacle of witnesse. Thus shalt thou clense the a waue them: for they are my gifte of the children of Israel, tand I haue taken them vnto me for all that openeth the Matrix, namely for the first borne of all the children of Israel.

For euery first borne amonge the children of Israel is myne, both of men and of catell, ${ }^{b}$ sens the tyme that I smote all the first borne in the lande of Egipte, and sanctified them unto myself, and toke the Leuites for all the first borne amonge the childre of Israel, and gaue them for a gifte vnto $\Lambda$ arō and his sonnes from amonge the children of Israel, $\frac{t}{y}$ they shulde do the seruyce of the children of Israel [^150]in the Tabernacle of witnesse, to make attonemēt for the children of Israel, that there be not a plage amonge the children of Israel, yf they wyll come nye ${ }^{\circ}$ Sanctuary.

And Moses with Aaron and the whole congregacio of the childre of Israel, dyd with the Leuites all as the LORDE had commañded Moses. And they purified the Leuites, and waszshed their clothes. And Aaron waued them before the LORDE, and made attonement for them, that they might be cleane.

After that wente they in, to do their office in the Tabernacle of witnesse before Aaron and his sonnes: as the LORDE commaūded Moses concernynge the Leuites, euen so dyd they with them.

And the LORDE spake vuto Moses a sayde: 'This is it that belongeth vnto the Leuites: * From fyue and twentye yeare and aboue, shal they go in to the office of the Tabernacle of witnesse. But frō fyftie yeare forth, they shal ceasse from the waitinge of the seruyce therof, and shall mynister nomore, but shal appoynte their brethren to waite and to serue in the Tabernacle of wytnesse: but the office shal not they execute. Thus shalt thou do with the Leuites in their seruyces, that euery one maye wayte vpon his awne charge.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses in the wildernesse of Sinai, in $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ first moneth of the seconde yeare that they were departed out of the lande of Egipte, a sayde: ${ }^{a}$ Let the children of Israel kepe Easter in his season, euen vpon the fourtene daye of this moneth at euen, in his season shall they kepe it, acordynge to all the statutes a lawes therof. And Moses spake to $\dot{8}$ childre of Israel, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they shulde kepe Easter. And they kep Easter ypo the fourtene daye of the first moneth at euen in the wildernes of Sinai. Acordinge to all that the LORDE cōmaunded Moses, euen so dyd the children of Israel.

Then were there certayne men defyled of a deed man, so that they coulde not kepe Easter vpon that daye: these came before Moses and Aaron the same daye, and sayde vnto him: We are defiled of a deed mā: wherfore shulde we be despysed, that we must not bringe oure giftes in his season amonge [^151]the children of Israel? Moses sayde vito them: Stonde styll, I wil heare what the LORDE commaundeth you.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of Israel, a saie: Whā eny man is defyled of a deed coarse, or is gone farre from you ouer the felde, ${ }^{b}$ or is amonge youre kynszfolkes, yet shall he kepe Easter, but in the seconde moneth vpo $\bar{y}$ fourtene daye at euen, and they shal eate it with menenended bred and sowre sawse, and shall leaue none of it vatyll the mornynge, ${ }^{+}$ ner breake eny bone therof, and shal kepe it acordinge to all y maner of $\mathfrak{y}$ Easter.

But whan it taried vpon the habitacion two dayes, or a moneth, or a longe season, then laye the children of Israel, and iourneyed not: and so whan it was taken vp, they wente on their iourney. For acordinge to the mouth of the LORDE they laye, and after the mouth of the LORDE they iourneyed, so $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they kepte the LORDES watch, acordinge to the worde of the LORDE by Moses.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: Make the two trompettes of beaten syluer, that thou mayest vse them, to call the cogregacion together, and whan the hoost shal breake rp. Whan they blowe with both, then shall the whole congregacion gather them selues together vnto the before the dore of the Tabernacle of witnesse. Whan they blowe but with one, then the captaynes, the rulers oner the thousandes in Israel shal gather them selues together mnto the. Whan ye trompe, then shal the hoostes that lye on the East syde, breake vp. And whan ye trompe the seconde tyme, the hoostes that lye on the South syde, shal breake vp. For ye shall trompe, whan they shal take their iourneys. *But whan $y$ congregacion is to be gathered together, ye shal blowe, and not trompe. This blowinge with the trompettes shal the sonnes of Aaron the prest do. And it shall be youre lawe for euer amonge youre posterities.

Whan ye go to a battayll in youre londe agaynst youre enemies $\frac{t}{y}$ vexe you, ye shall trompe with the trompettes, that ye maye be remembred before the LORDE youre Gorl, and delyuered from youre enemies.

Like wyse whan ye are mery, and in youre feast dayes, $\boldsymbol{a}$ in youre new Monethes, ye shal blowe with the trompettes ouer youre burntsacrifices $x$ healthofferinges, $\frac{t}{y}$ it maie be a remembraunce vnto you before youre God. I am the LORDE youre God.

Vpon the twentye daye in the seconde moneth of the seconde yeare, arose the cloude from the habitacion of witnesse. And the childre of lsrael wente on their iourney out of the wyldernesse of Sinai, ${ }^{a}$ and the clonde abode in the wyldernesse of Paran, First brake yp (acordinge to the worde of the LORDE by Moses.) Namely, the baner of the hoost of Iuda wente forth first with their armies, ${ }^{\delta}$ and ouer their hoost was Nahasson the some of Aminadab. And ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Isachar was Nathaneel the sonne of Zuar. And ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Zabulon was Eliab the sonne of Elon. ${ }^{c}$ And the habitacion was taken downe, and the children of Gerson and Merari bare the habitacion.

After that wente the baner of the hoost of Ruben with their armies, and ouer their hoost was Elizur the sonne of Sedeur. And ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Simeon was Selumiel the sonne of Zuri Sadai. And Eliasaph the sonne of Deguel ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Gad. Then wente the Kahathites forwarde also, and bare the Sanctuary, and caused y habitacion be set rp agaynst they came.

After that wente the baner of the hoost of the children of Ephraim with their armies, and ouer their hoost was Elisama the sonne of Amihud. And Gamaliel the sonne of Pedazur ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Manasse. And Abidan the sonne of Gedeoni ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Ben Iamin.

After that wente the baner of the hoost of the children of Dan with their Armyes, (and so were all the hoostes vp ) and Ahieser the sonne of Ammi Sadai was ouer their hoost. And Pagiel $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Ochran, ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Asser. And Ahira the sonne of Enan ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Nephthali. Thus the childre of Israel wète forth with their armyes.

And Moses spake vnto his brother in lawe, Hobab the somne of Raguel of Madian: We go unto the place, of the which $\dot{y}$ LORDE sayde: I wil geue it you: Come now with rs therfore, and we wil do $\hat{y}$ best with the, for the LORDE hath promysed good into Israel. But he answered: I wil not go with you, but wil go in to myne awne londe vnto my kymred. He sayde: Oh nay, leaue vs not: for thou knowest where is best for rs to pytche in the wyldernesse, and thou shalt be oure eye. And yf thon goest with vs, loke what good the LORDE doth vnto vs, the same wil we do znto the. So they departed from the mount

And whan the sprete rested vpon them, they propheeied, and ceassed not. ther two men, of whom the one was called Eldad, $\mathfrak{y}$ other Medad, © the sprete rested rpo them. For they were wrytten yp also, a yet were they not gone out vito the Tabernacle, and they prophecied in the hoost. Then ran there a lad, a tolde Moses, a sayde: Eldad and Medad prophecie in the hoost. Then answered Iosua $\dot{y}$ sonne of Nun Moses sernaunte (whom he had chosen) and sayde: My lorde Moses for bydde them. But Moses sayde rnto him: Art thou gelous for my sake? * wolde God, $\dot{y}$ all the people of $\dot{y}$ LORDE coulde prophecie, and that $\hat{y}$ LORDE wolde geue them his sprete. So Moses and the Elders of Israel gat them to the hoost.

Then wente out the wyde from y LORDE, ${ }^{a}$ a caused quayles to come from the see, a scatred the ouer the hoost, here a dayes iourney, there a dayes iourney rounde aboute $y$ hoost, two cubytes hye aboue $f$ earth. AND Miriam at Aaron spake agaynst ${ }^{d}$ Moses because of his wife the Morian $\ddagger$ which he had taken, because he had takè a Morian to wife, and they sayde: Doth the LORDE speake onely thorow Moses? Speaketh he not also by vs? And the LORDE herde it. § But Moses was a very meke man, aboue all men ypon earth. And laistely spake the LORDE vito Moses, and to Aaron, and to Miriam: Go out ye thre vnto ${ }^{\text {c }}$ Then came the LORDE downe in the cloudy piler, a stode in the dore of the Tabernacle, a called Aaron a Miriam, at they both wēte out. And he sayde: Heare my wordes: If eny man be a prophet of the LORDE, vnto him wil 1 shewe my self in a vision, or wil speake vnto him in a dreame. But not so with my seruaunt Moses, ${ }^{f}$ which is faithfull in all my house. II Mouth to mouth speake I vnto him, t he seyth the LORDE in his fashion, not thorow darke wordes or licknesses: Wherfore were ye not afrayed then to speake agaynst my seruaunt Moses?

And $\dot{y}$ wrath of the LORDE waxed whote ouer them, t he turned him awaye, and $\dot{y}$ cloude also departed from the Tabernacle. ${ }^{5}$ And beholde, then was Miriam become leporus, as it were snowe. And $\Lambda$ aron turned him vnto Miriam, and sawe that she was leporous, and sayde vnto Moses: Oh my lorde, put not the synne vpon vs, which we haue foolishly committed and synned, that she be not as one that commeth deed out of his mothers wombe: It hath eaten vp half hir flesh allready.

But Moses cried vnto the LORDE, a sayde: Oh God, heale her. The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Yf hir father had spytte in hir face, shulde she not be ashamed seuen dayes? Let her be shut out of $\hat{y}$ hoost seuē dayes, after $\stackrel{t}{y}$ let her be receaued agayne. So Mirian was shut out of the hoost seue dayes, a the people wente no farther, tyll Miriam was receaued againe. AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, a sayde: ' Sende forth men to spye out $\stackrel{\rightharpoonup}{y}$ lande of Canaan (which I wil geue vnto $\dot{y}$ children of lsrael) of euery trybe of their fathers a man, and let them all be soch as are captaynes amonge them. Mloses sent the out of the wildernes of Paran, acordinge to the worde of the LORDE, soch as were all heades amonge the children of Israel, and these are their names:

Samma the sonne of Zacur, of the trybe of Ruben. Saphat the sonne of Hori, of the trybe of Simeon. Caleb y sonne of Iephune, of the trybe of Iuda. Igeal the sonne of loseph, of the trybe of Isachar. Hosea the sonue of Nun, of ' y trybe of Ephraim. Palti the sonne of Raphu, of the trybe of Ben Iamin. Gadiel the sonne of Sodi, of y trybe of Zabulon. Gaddi the somne of Susi, of the trybe of loseph of Manasse. Ammiel the sonne of Gemalli, of the trybe of Dan. Sethur $\dot{y}$ sonne of Michael, of the trybe of Asser. Nahebi the somne of Vaphsi, of the trybe of Nephtali. Guel the soune of Machi, of the trybe of Gad. These are the names of the men, whom Moses sent forth to spye out the lande. As for Hosea the sonne of Nun, Moses called him Iosua.

Now whan Moses sent the forth to spye out the lande of Canaan, he sayde vnto the: Go vp southwarde, and get you vp to the mountaynes, and loke vpon the londe how it is: and the people that dwell therin, whether they be stronge or weake, fewe or many: and what maner of lande it is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad: a what maner of cities they be that they dwell in, whether they be fenced with walles, or not: and what maner of lande it is, whether it be fatt or leane, and whether there be trees therin, or not. Be of a good corage, and bringe of the frutes of the londe. It was euen aboute the tyme, that grapes are first rype.

They wente vp, a spyed the lande, from $\dot{y}$ wildernes of Zin, vutyll Rehob, as mē go vuto Hemath. They wente vp also towarde the south, and came vuto Hebron, where Ahiman was, and Sesai and Thalmai, the children of Enack (Hebron was buylded seuen yeare before Zoan in Egipte.)

And they came to the ryuer of Escol, and a there they cut downe a cluster of grapes, and caused two to beare it ypon a staffe, pomgranates also and fygges. The place is called the ryuer of Escol, because of the cluster of grapes, which the children of Israel cut downe there.

And whan they had spyed out the lande, they turned bake againe after fourtye daies, and wente, and came to Moses and Aaron, a to the whole congregacion of $\dot{y}$ children of Israel in to $\dot{y}$ wyldernesse of Paran, eué vnto

Cades, and brought them worde agayne, and to the whole congregacion, how it stode, and let them se the frute of the lande, and tolde them, and sayde: We came in to $\dot{y}$ lande, whither ye sent vs, where it floweth with mylke and hony, and this is the frute therof: sauynge that stronge people dwell therin, and the cities are exceadinge stronge and greate. And we sawe the children of Enack there also. The Amalechites dwell in the south countre, the Hethites, and Iebusites and Amorites dwell ypon the mountaynes, but the Cananites dwell by the see, and aboute Iordane.

Howbeit Caleb stylled $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ people that was agaynst Moses, and sayde vnto them : Let vs go vp , and conquere the lande, for we are able to ouercome it. But the men that wente ${ }^{1} \mathrm{p}$ with him, sayde: ${ }^{\circ}$ We are not able to go vp agaynst that people, for they are to stronge for vs. And of the lande that they had searched, they brought vp an euell reporte amonge the childre of Israel, and saide: The laide that we have gone thorow to spye out, eateth yp the indwellers therof: and all the people that we sawe therin, are men of greate stature. We sawe giauntes there also, yee giauntes as the children of Enack: and we semed in oure sighte as ${ }^{\text {y }}$ greshoppers, and so dyd we in their sighte.

THEN the whole cogregacion toke on, 3 and cryed, ${ }^{c}$ and the people wepte $\frac{\dot{y}}{\frac{2}{6}}$ night. And all the childrē of Israel murmured agaynst Moses and Aaron, and the whole congregacion sayde vnto them: Oh that we had dyed in the lande of Egipte, or that we might dye yet in this wyldernesse. Wherfore bryngeth the LORDE is in to this lande, that oure wyies shulde fall thorow the swerde, and oure children be a praye? Is it not better, that we go agayne in to Egipte? And they sayde one to another: Let vs make a captayne, and go in to Egipte agayne.

But Moses © Aaron fell ypo their faces before $\dot{y}$ whole cogregacion of the multitude of the childre of Israel. *And losua y sonne of Nun, a Caleb y some of Iephune (which also had spyed out the lande) rente their clothes, a spake to the whole cogregacion of the children of Israel: The londe $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{t}}$ we haue walked thorow to spye it out, is a very good [^156]lande. If the LORDE haue lust whto rs , he shal brynge vs in to the same londe, a geue it vs , which is a lade that floweth with mylke ¢ hony. But in anye wyse rebell not ye agaynst the LORDE, $\tau$ * feare not $y$ people of this lande, for we wil eate the p p as bred. Their defence is departed frō them, + but the LORDE is with vs, be not ye afrayed of them.

Aud all the people, bad stone them with stones. Then appeared the glory of the LORDE in the Tabernacle of witnesse vnto all the children of Israel, $\tau$ the LORDE sayde ynto Moses: How longe shal this people blaspheme me? And how longe wil it be, or they beleue me, for all the tokes that I haue shewed amonge them? I wil smyte them with pestilence $\mathbb{T}$ destroye thé, ${ }^{a} \mathbb{C}$ wil make of the a greater $\mathbb{t}$ mightier people then this is.
${ }^{\circ}$ But Moses sarde vnto ý LORDE: Then shal $\mathfrak{y}$ Egipcians heare it (for with thy power hast thon brought this people from amõge thē) so shal it be tolde the inhabiters of this lande also, which haue herde, $\dot{y}$ thou O LORDE art amonge this people, $\frac{t}{y}$ thou art sene from face to face, it that thy cloude stondeth ouer them, 'and that thou goest before them in the cloudy piler on the daye tyme, and in the fyrie piler on the night season. If thou shuldest now slaye this people as one man, then the Hevthen that haue herde so good reporte of the, shulde saye: ${ }^{d}$ The LORDE was not able to brynge the people in to the londe, that he sware vnto them, therfore hath he slayne them in the wyldernes.
So let the power of the LORDE now be greate, acordinge as thou hast spoken and sayde: The LORDE is of longe sufferaunce and of greate mercy, and forgeueth syme and trespace, and leaueth no man innocent, $\tau$ vysiteth the myszdede of the fathers rpon the children in to the thirde and fourth generacion. O be gracious now vnto the synne of this people acordinge to thy greate mercy, like as thou hast forborne this people also, euer from Egipte vnto this place. And the LORDE sayde: I haue forgeue it, as thou hast saide. But as truly as I lyue, all $\dot{y}$ worlde shal be full of my glory. 'For of all [^157]$\dot{y}$ men that haue sene my glory $\mathbb{a}$ my tokens, which I dyd in ligipte and in the wildernesse, and tempted me now ten tymes, © haue not herkened vnto my voyce, there shall not one se the londe that I sware vnto their fathers: nether shal eny of them that have blasphemed me, se it. ₹ But my seruañt Caleb, because there is another maner sprete with him, I because he hath folowed me, him wil I brynge in to the lande, which he hath gone thorow, a his sede shal conquere it, and $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ Amalechites also and the Cananites, that dwell in the lowe countrees. Tomorow turne yon, and get you to the wyldernesse, in the waye towarde the reed see.

And ẙ LORDE spake vato Moses t Aaron, a sayde: How lōge shal this euell multitude murmur agaynst me? For 1 haue herde the murmuringe of the childrē of Israel, $\frac{t}{y}$ they haue murmured agaynst me. Tell then therfore: As trulye as İ lyue (sayeth ẙ LORDE) I wil do suto you, euen as ye haue spoken in myne eares: Youre carcases shal lye in this wildernesse. And all ye that $\|$ were nombred from twentye yeare and aboue, which haue murmured agaynst me, shall not come in to the lande (eöcernynge the which I lift rp my hāde, $\dot{y}$ I wolde let you dwell therin) saue Caleb $\check{y}$ sonne of lephune, and Iosua the sonne of Nun.
Youre children, of whom ye sayde: ${ }^{f}$ They shalbe a sporle, them wyll İ bryige in, so $\dot{\dot{y}}$ they shal knowe the lande, which ye haue refused. But ye with youre carcases shall lye in this wildernesse, and youre children shal wander in this wildernesse fourtye yeares, a beare youre whordome, tyll youre carcases be waisted in the wildernesse, acordinge to the nombre of $\bar{y}$ fourtye dayes, wherin ye spyed out the londe. A daye for a yeare, so $\dot{y}$ fourtye yeares ye shall beare youre myszdede, that ye maye knowe what it is, whan I withdrame my hande. Euen I the LORDE haue sayde it, $\mathbb{C}$ wil do it in dede into all this euell congregacion, that have lift vp them selues agaynst me: In this wildernesse shal they be consumed, and there shal they dye.
${ }^{8}$ So there dyed and were plaged before the LORDE all the mé, whom Moses sent to spye out the lāde. a came agayne, and made the whole ēgregacion to murmur agaynst it, [^158]|because they brought vp a myszreporte of the lande, that it was euell. But Iosua the some of Nun, and Caleb $\hat{y}$ sonne of Iephune were left alyue, of the men that wente to spye out the lande. And Moses spake these wordes vnto all the children of Israel. Thé toke the people greate sorowe.

And they arose early in $\hat{y}$ mornynge, and wente rp to the toppe of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ mountayne, and sayde: ${ }^{\text {a }} \mathrm{Lo}$, here are we, and will go up to the place, wherof the LORDE hath sayde: for we haue symed. But Moses sayde: wherfore go ye on this maner beyonde $\dot{y}$ worde of the LORDE? It shall not prospere with you: go not vp (for $\dot{y}$ LORDE is not amöge you) y ye be not slayne before youre enemies. For the Amalechites and Cananites are there before you, © ye shal fall thorow yं swerde, because ye haue turned youre selues from the LORDE, and the LOṘDE shal not be with you.

But they were blynded to go ip to the toppe of the mountaine: ncuertheles the Arke of the LORDES conenaunt a Moses came not out of the hooste. Then came downe $\mathfrak{y}$ Amalechites a Cananites which dwelt vpon that mountayne, and smote them and hewed them, euen vnto Horma.

Come I praye the, eurse me this people.

Balaam answered, a sayde vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ seruaūtes of Balac: * If Balac wolde geue me his honse full of syluer a golde, yet coulde I not go beyonde $f$ worde of the LORDE my God, to do litle or greate. Neuertheles tary ye here this night, $\frac{t}{y}$ I maye wete, what the LORDE wil saye more vnto me. Then came God to Balaam by night, at saide vnto him: Yf the men are come to call the, get the xp then, and go with the : but what I shal saye vnto the, that shalt thou do.

Then rose Balaam vp in the mornynge, a * Nu. 24. c sadled his Asse, a wente with the prynces of $y$ Moabites. But the wrath of God waxed whote, because he wēte. And the angell of $\dot{y}$ LORDE stode in the waye, to withstode him. But he rode vpō his Asse, two seruauntes with him. And $\dot{y}$ Asse sawe $\dot{y}$ angell of $\dot{y}$ LORDE stōdinge in $\stackrel{\circ}{\dot{j}}$ waye, $\boldsymbol{a}$ his swerde drawen in his hāde. And ỳ Asse turned a syde out of $\hat{y}$ waye, $\pi$ wēte in to the felde. But Balaam smote her, $y^{t}$ she shulde go in the waye.

Then stode the angell of the LORDE in $\hat{y}$ pathe by the vynyardes, where there were walles on both the sydes. And whan ${ }^{\circ}$ Asse sawe the angell of the LORDE, she wrenshed vnto the wall, $\tau$ thrust Balaams fote vnto the wall. And he smote her agayne. Thē wēte the angell of the LORDE farther, $t$ stode in a narow place, where there was no waye to turne, nether to the righte hāde ner to ${ }^{\circ}$ lefte. And whan the Asse sawe the angell of the LORDE, she fell downe vnder Balaam. Then was Balaams wrath furions, © smote the Asse with a staffe.

Then opened the LORDE the mouth of $\dot{y}$ Asse, and she sayde vnto Balaam: What have I done vnto the, that thou hast smytten me now thre tymes? Balaam sayde unto fo Asse: Becanse thou hast mocked me. Oh y I had a swerde now in my hande, I wolde kyll the. The Asse sayde vnto Balaam: Am not I thine Asse, which thou hast rydden vpon in thy tyme vnto this daye? Was I euer wonte to do so vnto the? He sayde: No.

Then opened the LORDE the eyes of Balaam, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he sawe $\dot{y}$ angell of the LORDE stondinge in $\dot{y}$ waye, $x$ a drawe swerde in his häde. And he enelyned him selfe, a bowed downe with his face. And the angell of the LORDE sayde vato him: Wherfore hast thou smytte thine Asse now thre tymes? Beholde, I am come out to resiste $\dot{y}$, for thy waye is frowarde, $\tau$ cōtrary vnto me. And $\dot{y}$ Asse sawe me, t auoyded fro me thre tymes: or els yf she had not turned asyde fro me, I had slayne the, $\tau$ saued the Asse alyue.
'Then sayde Balaam rnto $\stackrel{\stackrel{y}{\mathrm{y}}}{ }$ angell of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE : I have symned, for I wyst not, that thou stodest in the waye agaynst me. And now yf it displease $\dot{f}$, I wil turne agayne. The angell of $y$ LOR DE saide vnto him: Go with the me: but thou shalt speake nothinge els, then $\frac{t}{y}$ I shal saye moto $\stackrel{\ddot{y}}{\dot{y}}$. So Balaam wente forth with the princes of Balac. Whan Balac herde $\frac{t}{y}$ Balaam came, he wente out to mete him (in the cite of the Moabites $\frac{t}{y}$ lieth on the coaste of Arnon, which is on $\hat{y}$ vttemost border) a sayde rnto him: Dyd not I sende for y to call the? This shalbe an ordynannce and a perpetuall lawe vnto the children of Israel, as the LORDE comaunded Moses.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Get the ip in to this mount Abarim, it beholde the löde, which I shal geue vnto the childre of Israel. And whan thou hast sene it, thou shalt be gathered unto thy people§ as Aaron thy brother was gathered: for ye were dishobedient vnto my worde in the wyldernesse of Zin, in y strife of the cogregacion, whan ye shulde have sanctified me, thorow the water before them. $j$ 'This is the water of stryfe at Cades in the wyldernesse of Zin.

And Moses spake unto the LORDE sayde: O let the LORDE God of the spretes of all flesh set a mã ouer the congregacion, which maye go in a out before them, a to leade the out $\mathbb{x}$ in, $\frac{t}{y}$ the congregacion of the LORDE be not as the shepe without a shepherde.

And the LORDE sayde unto Moses: Take vnto the Iosua the sonne of Nun, ${ }^{6}$ which is a man in whom is the sprete, and put thine handes upon him, a set him before Eleasar the prest, and before the whole congregacion, and geue him a charge in their sighte, beutyfye him with thy bewty, that the whole congregacion of the ehildren of Israel maye [^171]be obediēt vnto him. And he shal stonde before Eleasar the prest, which shall axe councell for him after the maner of the * lighte, before the LORDE. At the mouth of him shall both he and all the children of Israel with him, and the whole congregacion go in and out.

Moses dyd as the LORDE cōmaunded him, a toke Iosua, and set him before Eleasar the prest, and before all the congregacion, and tlayed his handes vpon him, and gaue him a charge, as the LORDE sayde vito Moses.

a TTHE children of Ruben and the children of Gad had an exceadinge greate multitude of catell, and sawe the londe of Iaeser and Gilead $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ it was a mete place for catell, and came © spake vito Moses and to Eleasar the prest, and to the captaynes of the congregacion: The londe of Atroth, Dibon, Iaesar, Nimra, Heszbō, Eleale, Seban, Nebo, © Beon, which the LORDE smote before $\dot{y}$ congregacion of Israel, is a mete londe for catell, and thy seruauntes haue many catell. And they sayde morouer: Yf we hane founde fanoure before the, the geue thy seruauntes this londe in possession, and we wyl not go ouer Iordane.

Moses sayde vnto them: Youre brethren shall go to the warre, and wyll ye tary here? Wherfore turne ye y hertes of the children of Israel, that they shulde not go oner in to the londe that the LORDE shall geue them?
( ) * Thus dyd youre fathers also, whan I sent them out from Cades Bernea, to spye out $\dot{y}$ londe. And whan they were come vp to $\ddot{y}$ ryuer of Escol, and sawe ẙ londe, they turned the hertes of the children of Israel, so $\mathrm{y}^{t}$ they wolde not in to the londe which $\dot{y}$ LORDE wolde haue geuen them.

And the LORDE was wroth at the same tyme, a sware, © sayde: ${ }^{a}$ These men $\dot{y}$ tre come out of Egipte, from twêtye yeare olde a aboue, shall not se the lande which I sware vnto Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, because they hane not wholy folowed me: saue Caleb $\dot{\hat{y}}$ sonne of Iephune y $\mathfrak{y}$ Kenisite, $\pi$ Iosua $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Nun: for they haue wholy folowed $\hat{y}$ LORDE. So the LORDE was wroth with Israel, a let the wander in the wildernesse fourtye yeares, tyll all $\dot{\circ}$ generacion $\dot{y}$ had done euell before the LORDE, was consumed.

And beholde, ye are rysen up in youre d fathers steade, to increase the nombre of synfull men, $\pi$ to augmente yet the wrath $\pi$ indignacion of the LORDE agaynst Israel. For yf ye turne you backe from folowinge him, he shal yet leaue them more in the wildernes, a so shal ye destroye all this people.
Then stepte they to him, © sayde : we wyll but buylde shepefoldes here for oure shepe a catell, it cities for oure children: As for oure selues, we will go ready armed before the children of Israel, tyll we haue broughte them ynto their place: Oure childre shal remayne in the fenced cities, because of $\dot{y}$ indwellers of the londe. We will not turne home agayne, tyll the children of Israel haue taken euery one his inheritaunce in possession: for we wyil not inheret with them beyonde Iordane: for oure inheritaunce shal fall vnto vs vpon this syde Iordane Eastwarde.

Moses sayde vnto them: + Yf ye wil do this, that ye wil haruesse youre selues to the warre before the LORDE, then go ouer Iordane before the LORDE, who so euer is harnessed amonge you, tyll he haue dryuen out lis enemies before his face, and vntyll the londe be subdued before the LORDE, then shal ye returne, © be mgiltye before the LORDE, and before Israel, © so shal ye hate this londe in possession before the LORDE. But yf ye will not do so, beholde, ye shal offende agaynst the LORDE, and be sure, that youre syme shal fynde you out. Buylde cities now therfore for youre children, and shepefoldes and stalles for youre shepe and catell, and do as ye haue spoken.

The childrē of Gad, $\mathbb{\imath}$ the childre of Ruben五 sayde vnto Moses: Thy sermauntes shal do as my lorde hath cōmaunded. Oure ehildren, wyues, substaunce, a all oure catell, shal be in $\dot{y}$ eities of Gilead. But we thy seruauntes will go all harnessed for the warre vuto battaill before y LORDE, as my lorde hath saide.

Thē Moses comannded Eleasar ỳ prest a Iosua the sonue of Nun, $\mathbb{\pi}$ the chefe fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel, and saide vnto them: If the children of Gad a the children of ${ }^{a}$ Ruben go ouer Iordane with you, all prepared to fight before the LORDE, $\pi$ whan the londe is subdued vnto you, the geue them the londe of Gilead in possessio. But yf they go not ouer with you in harnes, then shal they inheret with you in y lode of Canaā.

The children of Gad and the children of Rubē answered, © sayde: As ẙ LORDE hath spoken vnto thy seruauntes, so wyll we do: we wil go harnessed before the LORDE in to $\mathfrak{y}$ lade of Canaan, and possesse oure enheritaunce on this syde Iordane.

So Moses gave vnto ẙ children of Gad and to the children of Ruben, ${ }^{b}$ and to the halfe trybe of Manasse the sonne of loseph, $\frac{8}{y}$ kyngdome of Sihon kynge of the Anorites and the kyngdome of Og the kynge of Basan, the londe with the cities therof in all $y$ coastes of $\mathfrak{y}$ countre rounde aboute. a AD N chefe fathers of the kynred of the childrē of Gilead $\dot{y}$ sonne of Machir (which was the sonne of Manasse of the kynred of the children of loseph) came forth, and spake before Moses, and before the captaynes amonge the chefe fathers of the children of Israel, and saide: Syr, the LORDE hath t commaunded, that ye shulde geue the londe by lott vnto the childre of Israel to inheret. And thou my lorde hast commaunded thorow the LORDE, ${ }^{b}$ that the enheritame of oure brother Zelaphead shulde be genee vato his doughters. Now yf eny men out of the trybes of lsrael take them to wrues, then shal oure fathers enheritaunce be lesse: and as moch as they haue, shal come to $\dot{y}$ enheritaunce of the trybe that they come vato. Thus shal the lott of oure inheritaunce be myuished. Thus shal oure fathers enheritaunce be mynished, as moch as they haue.

Moses charged the childre of Israel (acordinge to the commaundement of the LORDE) and sayde: 'The trybe of the children of loseph bath sayde righte. This is it that $\hat{y}$ LORDE commaundeth the doughters of Zelaphead, and sayeth: $\ddagger$ Let them mary as they like best, onely that they mary in y kynred of the trybe of their father, that the enheritaunce of the children of Israel fall not frō one trybe to another. For euery one amonge the children of lsrael shall cleue to the enheritaunce of the trybe of his father: a euery doughter that possesseth eny enheritaunce amonge the trybes of the children of Israel, shal be maryed nito one of the kynred of the trybe of hir father: ' ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ euery one amonge the children of Israel maye enioye his fathers enheritaunce, and that the enheritaunce fall not from one trybe to another: but that euery one maye cleue to his awne enheritance amonge the trybes of the children of Israel.

As the LORDE comaunded Moses, eue so dyd $\frac{8}{y}$ doughters of Zelaphead, Mahela, Thirza, Hagla, Milca a Noa a were maried moto their fathers brothers sonnes, of y kynred of the children of Manasse the sonne of loseph. So their enheritance remayned in the trybe of the kynred of their father.

These are the commaundemétes a lawes, which y LORDE commaunded by Moses vito the childre of Isracl, in the felde of the Moabites by Iordane ouer agaynst Iericho.

Cbe first Chapter.

THESE are the wordes that Moses spake unto all lsrael on the other syde Lordane in the wildernesse, in the playne felde towarde the reed see, betwene Paran, Thophel, Laban, Hazeroth, and Disahab, eleuen daies iourney from Horeb, by the waye of mount Seir nuto Cades Bernea. And it fortuned the first daye of the eleuenth moneth in the fortieth yeare, that Moses spake vuto $\dot{y}$ children of Israel acordinge vito all as $\hat{y}$ LORDE commaunded him, * after he had sinytten Sihon $y$ kynge of the Amorites which dwelt at Heszbon: and Og the kynge of Basan, that dwelt at Astaroth, and at Edrei.

On the other syde lordane in y lande of the Moabites, beganne Mases to declare this lawe, and sayde: The LORDE oure God spake rnto vs vpon mount Horeb, a sayde : Ie haue bene loge ynough vpon this mountayne, turne you, a departe hence, that ye maye come to the mountaynes of the Amorites, and to all their neghbours in y feldes, vpon mountaynes, and in the valleys towarde the South and towarde the see syde, of the lande of Canaan: and to mount Libanus, 23 euen vnto the greate water Euphrates. Beholde, I haue delyuered you the londe, go in, and take it in possession, which the LORDE sware unto youre fathers, $A$ braham, Isaae and lacob, that he wolde geue it vnto thé, and their sede after them.

Then saide I vnto you at the same tyme: ${ }^{a} 1 \mathrm{am}$ not able to beare you my self alone, for the LORDE youre God hath inereased you, so that this daye ye are as $\dot{y}$ starres of heauen in multitude. (The LOLDE God of youre fathers make you yet many thousande tymes mo, t blesse you, as he hath promysed you.) How can I alone beare soche cōbraunce, a charge, a stryfe amōge you? Prouyde here men of wyszdome a voderstondinge, soch as are knowne amonge youre trybes, the wil 1 set to be heades vito you.

Then answered ye me, and sayde: It is a good thinge, that thou sayest thou wilt do. Then toke I y heades of youre trybes, wyse and famons me', and set them ouer you to be heades, ouer thousandes, ouer hundreds, ouer fiftye and ouer ten: and officers amonge youre trybes.

[^181]And I charged youre iudges at $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ same tyme, a sayde: Heare youre brethrē, a tiudge righteously betwene euery man and his brother, and the straunger. Ye shall knowe no personne in iudgment, but shall heare the small as well as the greate, and be afrayed of no man: for the Iudgment is Gods. But yf eny cause be to harde for you, ${ }^{6}$ let it be broughte vnto me, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ I maye heare it. Thus commaunded I you at the same tyme, all $\stackrel{ \pm}{y}$ ye shulde doo.

Then departed we from Horeb, and walked thorow the whole wyldernesse (which is greate and terryble as ye haue sene) by the waye to y mountaynes of the Amorites, as the LORDE oure God commainded vs, and came rnto Cades Bernea. Then sayde I vuto you: Ye are come to $\dot{y}$ mountaynes of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ Amorites, which the LORDE oure God shal gene vs. Beholde, there the londe before the, which the LORDE thy God hath geue vnto the : Go vp, a conquere it, as $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE God of thy fathers hath sayde rnto the: $\S$ feare not, and be not diseoraged.

Then came ye all vinto me, and sayde: Let vs sende men before vs, 'to spye rs out the londe, and to brynge vs worde agayne, by what waye we shal go vp , and to what cities we shal come. That pleased me well, and I toke twolue men from amonge you, of euery trybe one. Which whan they were departed, and wente vp to hye countre, and cane to the ryuer Escol, they spyed it out, and toke of the frute of $\dot{y}$ londe with the ${ }^{d}$, and broughte it downe rito rs, and broughte vs worde agayne, and sayde: It is a good londe, that the LORDE oure God hath geuen vs.

But ye wolde not go vp, and were dishobedient wnto the mouth of the LORDE youre God, and murmured in youre tentes, and sayde: Beeause the LORDE hateth vs, therfore hath he broughte rs out of the londe of Egipte, to delyuer rs in to the handes of the Amorites, to destroye vs. Whither shal we go vp? Oure brethren haue discoraged oure hertes, a saide: "The people is greater a of hyer stature thē we, $\dot{y}$ eities are greate, a walled even wp to heauen. Morouer we haue sene there the ehildren of Enakim.

But I sayde suto you: Feare not, and be not afrayed of them: for the LORDE youre

God goeth before you, and shall fighte for you, like as he dealte with you in Egipte before youre eyes, and in the wyldernesse: where thou sawest, that the LORDE thy God bare the (euen as a man beareth his somne) thorow out all the waye that ye haue walked, tyll ye came to this place. And whan all the men of warre were cosumed, so $\dot{y}$ they were deed amonge the people, the LORDE spake vnto me, and sayde: This daie shalt thou go thorow the coast of $\underset{y}{\circ}$ Moabites by Ar, $\leftrightarrows$ shalt come nye vito $\hat{y}$ ehildren of Ainmon, ${ }^{+}$whom thou shalt not vexe ner prouoke. HEARE O Israel, This daie shalt thou 祭 go ouer lordane, that thou maiest come in to conquere the nacions, which are greater and mightier then thou, ${ }^{J}$ greate eities, walled vp vnto heauen, a greate people and of an hye stature, namely the childre of Enakim, whom thou hast knowne, and of whom thou hast herde saye: Who is able to stonde agaynst the children of Enakim? Therfore shalt thou knowe this daye, that the LORDE thy Grod goeth before the, fa cosumynge fyre. He shal destroye the, and shall subdue them before the, and shal driue them out, a shortly shall he brynge the to naught, as the LORDE hath promysed the.
${ }^{8}$ Now whan the LORDE thy God hath expelled them out before the, saye not thou thè in thine hert: The LORDE hath brought me in to take possession of this lande for myne awne righteousncs sake, where as $\mathrm{y}_{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE yet dryueth out the Heithen before the, because of their vngodlynes. ${ }^{h}$

For thou commest not in to take their londe in possession, for thine awne righteousnes sake, and because of thy right hert: but the LOlRDE dryueth out these Heythen, for their awne vngodlynesse sake, and that he maye perfourme the worde, which the LORDE hath sworne vnto thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and lacob.

Vnderstonde now therfore, that the LORDE $\dot{3}$ thy God geneth not the this londe to possesse it, for thine awne righteousnes sake. For thou art a styffuecked people.

And the LORDE shat do vnto them, as he dyd mito Sihon and Og the kynges of the Ainorites aud rnto their lode, ${ }^{\circ}$ which he destroyed.
t+ Now whan the LORDE shal deliuer the before you, ye shal do mnto them acordynge vnto all the commaundementes which I haue commaunded you. Be manly and strōge, feare not, and be not afrayed of them. For the LORDE thy God himselfe shal go with the, $\ddagger$ and shal not fayle the, ner forsake the.

And Moses called Iosua, and sayde vnto him before all Israel: Be stronge and bolde, for thou shalt brynge this people in to the londe, which " the LORDE hath sworne vito their fathers to geue them, and thou shalt [^226]parte it amonge them by lott. But the LORDE himseffe that goeth before you, euen HE shal be with the, and shal not fayle the, ner forsake the: Feare not, and be not afrayed.

And Moses wrote this lawe, and delyuered it unto the prestes the children of Leui (*which bare the Arke of the conenaunt of the LORDE) and wnto all the Elders of Israel.

And he commaunded them, and sayde: +At the ende of seuen yeares, in the tyme of the Fre yeare, in the feast of Tabernaeles whan all Israel come to appeare before the LORDE thy God, in the place that be shall chose, thon shalt cause this lawe to be proclamed before all Israel in their eares, namely, before the congregacion of the people, both of men, wemen, children, and thyj straungers which are within thy gates: that they maye heare and lerne to feare the LORDE their God, and be diligent to do all the wordes of this lawe: and that their children also which knowe nothinge, maye heare and lerne to feare the LORDE youre God, all youre lyue dayes which ye lyue in the londe, whither ye go ouer Iordane to possesse it.
30 And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Beholde, thy tyme is come that thou must die, call Iosua, and stonde in the Tabernacle of witnesse, that I maye geue him a charge. Moses wente with Iosua, and stode in the Tabernacle of witnesse. And the LORDE appeared in the Tabernacle in a cloudy pyler $\ddagger$ and the same cloudy pyler stode in the dore of the Tabernacle.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Beholde, thou shalt slepe with thy fathers, and this people wyll ryse yp, and go a whoringe after straunge goddes of the londe in to the which they come, §and wyll forsake me, and breake the couenaunt which I haue made with them. And then shall my wrath waxe whote agaynst them, at the same tyme, $\tau$ I shal forsake the $\bar{e}$, and byde my face fro them, that they maye be consumed. II And so whan moch aduersite a trouble commeth vpo the $\overline{\text {, }}$ they shal saye: Is not all this enell come vpo me, because God is not with me? But I shal hyde my face at the same tyme because of all the euell that they haue done, in that they have turned vnto other goddes.

[^227]Wryte now therfore this songe, a teach it $\mid$ 主 the children of Israel, and put it in their mouth, that this $\$$ songe maye be a witnesse vnto me anonge the children of Israel. For I wil brynge them in to the londe which I sware vinto their fathers, that floweth with mylke and hony.  And whan they cate, and are full and fatt, they shal turne voto other goddes, and serue them, and blaspheme me, and breake my coucnaunt.

And so whan moch myschefe and tribulacion is come rpon them, this songe shall answere before them for a witnesse. It shall not be forgotten out of the mouth of their sede: for I knowe their ynaginacion, that they go aboute etten now, before I brynge them in to the londe, which 1 sware rnto them.

So Moses wrote this songe at the same tyme, and taughte it the children of Israel. And the LORDE gave losua the sonve of Nun a charge, and sayde: ${ }^{+\dagger}$ Be stronge and bolde, for thou shalt brynge the children of Isracl in to the londe, which I sware vnto them, and I wil be with the.

Now whan Moses had wrytten out all the wordes of this lawe in a boke, he commaunded the Lenites (which bare the Arke of the LORDES couenaunt) and sayde: Take the boke of this lawe, and laye it by the syde of the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE youre God, that it maye be there a wytnesse agaynst the: for I knowe thy stubburnesse and thy harde neck. ${ }^{a}$ Beholde, whyle I am yet alyue with you this daye, ye haue bene disobedient vato the LORDE: how moch more after my death?

Gather now vnto me all the Elders of youre trybes, and youre officers, $\dot{y}$ I maye speake these wordes in their eares, $\ddagger \ddagger$ and take heauen and earth to recorde agaynst them. For I am sure that after my death ye shall marre youre selues, and turne asyde out of the waye, which I hane commaunded you: and so shall mysfortune happen vnto you herafter, because ye haue done euell in the sighte of the LORDE, in prouokynge him thorow the workes of youre handes.

So Moses spake out the wordes of this songe euen to the ende, in the eares of all the congregacion of Israel.

God is true, and no wickednes is there in him, righteons and iust is he.

The frowarde and ouerthwarte generacion hath marred them selues to himwarde and are not his children, because of their deformyte.

Thankest thou the LORDE thy God so, thou foolish and vowyse people?

Is not he thy father ${ }^{b}$ and thy LORDE ? $\ddagger$ Hath he not made the, and prepared the?

Then sent the kynge of Iericho mono Rahab, saynge: Delyuer the men forth that are come monto the in to thy house, for they are come to spye out the whole londe. Now as for the two men, the woman had hyd them, and sayde: There came men in vuto me in dede, but I knewe not whence they were. And at the shuttinge in of the gate whan it was darcke, they wente out, so $\frac{f}{y}$ I can not tell whither they be gone: folowe soone after them, for ye shal ouertake them. But she had caused them to elymme ap sito the house toppe, and hyd them moder the stalkes of flaxe, that she had prepared her rpo the toppe of the house. Howbeit the men folowed after them in $\hat{y}$ waye towarde Iordane, euen unto the ferye: and whan they that folowed ypon them were gone forth, the gate was shut.

And or euer the men layed them domne to slepe, she wente vp to them rnto the house toppe, and sayde vito the : I knowe that the LOIRDE shal delyuer you the londe, ffor the feare of you is fallen rpon vs, and all the inhabiters of the londe are discoraged at youre commynge. And they wente their waye. And she knyt the rose coloured lyne in the wyndowe.
'They wente on their waye, and came to the mountaynes, and remayned there thre dayes, tyll they that folowed vpon them were come agayne : for they soughte them thorow euery strete, $\pi$ yet they founde them not. So the two men turned agayne, and departed from the mountaynes, and passed ouer (Iordane) and came to Iosua the sonne of Num, and tolde him euery thinge, as they had founde it, T they sayde rnto Iosua: The LORDE hath gené rs all the londe in to oure handes, and all they that dwell in the londe, are sore afrayed of vs.

${ }^{a}$ And losua sayde vnto the people: Halowe youre selues, for tomorow shal thy LORDE bringe wonderous thinges to passe amoge you. And vato the prestes he sayde: Beare ye the Arke of y couenant, and go before the people. Then * bare they the Arke, and wente before the people. And the LORDE sayde vnto Iosua: This daye wyl I begynne to make the greate in the sighte of all lsrael, that they maie knowe, how that like as I was with Moses, so am 1 with the also. And commaunde thou the prestes that beare the Arke, and saye: Whan ye come before in the water of Iordane, stonde styll.

And Iosua sayde vito the children of Israel: Come hither, $\tau$ heare the worde of the LORDE youre God. He sayde morouer: By this shal ye perceaue, that the lyuynge God is amonge you, and that he shall dryue out before you $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ Cananites, Hethites, Heuites, Pheresites, Girgosites, Amorites and Iebusites. Beholde, the Arke of the couenaunt of him $\stackrel{t}{y}$ hath domynion ouer all londes, shall go before you in Iordanc. Now whan the people departed out of their tentes, to go ouer lordane, $\frac{\pi}{\text { t }}$ the prestes bare the Arke of the couenaunt before the people, and came in to lordane, a dypte their fete before in the water (as for Iordane on all his banckes it was full of all maner waters + of the londe) then the water that came dome frō aboue, stode straight vp ypon one heape, very farre from the cite of Adom, that lyeth on the syde of Zarthan: But the water that ranne downe to the see (euen to the salt see) fell awaye, and deereased.

AND ${ }_{y}^{\circ}$ LORDE sayde vnto Iosua: Take you twolue men, out of enery trybe one, t comaunde them, a saye: $\ddagger$ Take vp twolue stones out of Iordane, from the place where the fete of the prestes stode in their araye: $\underset{ }{\tau}$ cary them with you, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ ye maic leaue them in $y$ lotginge, where ye shal lodge this night. The losua called twolue mé which were prepared of the children of Israel, out of euery trybe one, $\pi$ sayde vito thē: Go youre waye oner before the Arke of the LOliDE youre God in the myddes of Jordane, $\pi$ take euery man a stone vpon his shulder, after the nombre of the trybes of $y$ children of Israel, $\frac{t}{y}$ they maye be a token amonge you. And whan youre children axe their fathers here after, and saye: What do these stones there? That ye maye then saye vito them, how that the water of Iordane claue in sunder before the Arke of the LORDES couenaunt, whan it wente thorow Iordane, a that these stones are set for a perpetuall remembraunce vito the children of 1srael.

Then dyd the children of Israel as Iosua commannded them, and bare twolue stones out of the myddes of Jordane (as the LORDE had sayde vnto losua) \& acordinge to the nombre of the trybes of the children of Israel, and broughte the same with them in to the lodginge, and lefte them there. And Iosua set up twolue stones in $y^{i}$ mydles of lordane, where $y$ fete of the prestes stode, that bare $\hat{y}$ Arke of the conenaunt : and there they be yet wnto this daye. As for $\dot{f}$ prestes that bare $\dot{y}$ Arke, they stode in the myddes of lordane, vutyll all was perfourmed that the LORDE charged losua to saye vuto $\hat{y}$ people || acordinge as Moses gaue fosna in commaundemèt. The people also made haist, and wente ouer. Now whan all the people was gone ouer, the Arke of the LORDE wente oner also, and the prestes wente before the people.

F And the Rubenites, a Gaddites, and $\dot{y}$ halfe trybe of Manasse wente harnessed before the childrē of 1srael, like as Moses had sayde vnto the: Aboute a fortye thousande men ready harnessed to the warre, wente before the LORDE to the battayll, ypon $\hat{y}$ felle of lericho. * In that daye the LORDE made losua greate in the sighte of all Israel: and like as they feared Moses, so stode they in awe of him. all his life longe.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Iosua: Commande the prestes which beare the Arke of witnesse, that they come yp out of Iordane. So Iosua comaunded the prestes, a sayde: Come up out of lordane. And whan the prestes $\stackrel{\stackrel{y}{4}}{\dot{+}}$ bare the Arke of the conenant of $\dot{y}$ LORDE were come out of Jordane, and trode with the soles of their fete ypon the drye londe, $\dot{y}$ water of Jordane came agayne in to his place, and flowed (like as afore tyme) ypon all his banckes.

At the same tyme sayde ${ }^{\circ} \mathrm{LORDE}$ vato Fosua: Make the knyues II of stone, and cireumeyse the children of Israel agayne the seconide tyme. Then Iosua made him knyues of stone, and cireuncyset the childre of Israel rpon the toppe of the foreszkymes. And the canse why losua circumeysed all the males of

But all the people that were borue in $\dot{y} \mathbf{x}$ wyldernesse by the waye (after they departed out of Egipte) were not circumeysed: for the children of Israel walked fortye yeares in the wyldernesse, vntyll all the people of the men of warre that came out of Egipte, were consumed, because they herkened not vnto the voyce of the LORDE, like as the LORDE sware vito them, that they shulde not se the londe, which the LORDE sware vnto their fathers to geue vnto vs, euen a londe that floweth with mylke a honye: their children which were come vp in their steade, dyd Iosua cirenmeyse: for they had the foreszkynne, and were not circumeysed by the waye.

And whan all the people were circumcysed, they abode in their place, enē in ${ }^{\circ}$ tētes, tyll they were whole. And y LORDE saide vnto lostua: To daie have 1 turned $\dot{y}$ shame of Egipte awaye from you, a the same place was called Gilgall vnto this daye. ## $\mathbb{C y s}$ bi. Chapter.

${ }^{3}$ S for lericho, it was shut $\mathbb{\pi}$ kepte because of the childre of Israel, so that no man mighte go out ner in. But the LORDE sayde vnto Iosua: Beholde, I haue geuen lericho with $y$ kynge and men of warre therof, in to thy hande. Let all the men of warre go once rounde aboute y cite, and do so sixe dayes. But vpon the seuenth daye let the prestes take the seluen trompettes of the yeare of Iubilye before the Arke, and go the same seuenth daye seuen tymes aboute the cite, and let the prestes blowe the trompettes. And whan the horne of the yeare of Iubilye bloweth and maketh a sounde, so that ye heare the trompettes, all the people shal make a greate shoute, then shal the walles of the cite fall downe, and $\dot{y}$ people shal fall in, euery one straight before him.

Then losua the sonne of Nun called $\dot{y}$ prestes, and sayde vnto them: Beare ye the Arke of the couenaunt, and let seuen prestes take the seuen trompettes of the yeare of Iubilye before the Arke of the LORDE. But vnto the people he sayde: Get you hence, and go roude aboute the cite: and let him that is harnessed, go before the Arke of the LORDE. Whan losua had spoken this into the people, the seuen prestes bare the seuen trompettes of the yeare Iubilye before the Arke of the LORDE, and wente a blew the trompettes, and the Arke of the LORDES couenaūt folowed after them : and who so was harnessed, wente before the prestes that blewe the trompettes, and the multitude folowed the Arke. And all was full of ${ }^{8}$ noyse of the trompettes. But Iosua commaunded the people, and sayde: Ye shall make no shoute, ner let youre voyce be herde, nether shall ye geue one worde out of youre mouth, vatyll the daye $\stackrel{t}{y}$ I saye vnto you: Make a shoute, then make a shoute.
So the Arke of the LORDE wente once rounde aboute the cite, and came agayne in to $\hat{y}$ hooste, a remayned therin: for Iosua rsed to ryse up early in the mornynge. And the prestes bare the Arke of the LORDE: so dyd the seuen prestes beare the seuen trompettes of the yeare of Iubilye before $\dot{y}$ Arke of the LORDE, and wente and blewe the trompettes: and who so was harnessed, wente before thé, but $\mathfrak{y}$ multitude folowed $\mathfrak{y}$ Arke of the LORDE. And all was full of the noyse of the trompettes.

The seconde daye wente they once aboute the cite also, and came agayne in to the hoost. Thus dyd they sixe dayes. But vpon the seueth daye whan the mornynge sprynge arose, they gat them up early, and wente after the same maner seuen tymes aboute $\mathfrak{y}$ cite, so that ypon the same one seuenth daye they wente seuen tymes aboute the cite.

And at the seucth tyme whan the prestes blewe the trompettes, Iosua sayde vito the people: Make a shoute, for y LORDE hath delyuered you the cite: Howbeit this cite, a all that is therin, shalbe damned snto the LORDE: * onely the harlot Rahab shal lyue, a all that are with her in $\hat{y}$ house, for she hyd the messaungers, whom we sent forth. + Onely bewarre of it that is damned, lest ye damne youre selues (yf ye take ought of it which is damned) and make the hoost of Israel to be damned, and brynge it in to mysfortune. But all the syluer and golde, with the onnametes of brasse a yron, shalbe sanctified monto the LORDE, that it maye come to the LORDES treasure.

Then made the people a greate shoute, and the prestes blewe the trompettes (for whan the people herde the noyse of the trompettes, they made a greate shoute) $\ddagger$ and the walles fell, and the people clymmed vp in to the cite, euery one st raight before him. Thus they wanne $\stackrel{y}{y}$ cite, and \& destroyed all that was in the cite with the edge of the swerde, both man and woman, yonge and olde, oxe, shepe, and Asse.

But losua sayde vuto $\hat{y}$ two men which had spyed out the londe: Go in to the house of the harlot, and bringe out the woman fro thence with all that she hath, acordynge as ye haue sworne wato her. Then $\dot{y}$ yonge men (the spyes) wente in, and brought forth Rahab with hir father and mother, o brethren, and all that she had, and all hir kynred, and caused her to dwell without the hoost of Israel. As for the cite, they brent it with fyre, $\pi$ all that was therin: onely the syluer and golde, and the omamentes of brasse and yro put they vito the treasure in the house of $\frac{\dot{y}}{}$ LORDE: but losua let II the harlot Rahab lyue, with hir fathers house, and all that she had: a she dwelt in Israel vnto this daie, beeause she had hyd the messaungers whō Iosua sent vnto Iericho to spye.

At the same tyme sware losua, and sayde: * Cursed be that man before the LORDE, which setteth p p this cite of Iericho a buyldeth it: Whan he laieth $\hat{y}$ foundaciō therof, let it cost him his first sonne: And whà he setteth ip the gates of it, let it cost him his yogest some. Thus the LORDE was with losua, so that he was spoken of in all londes.

BUT the children of Israel had connytted a sime in the ${ }^{a}$ thinge $\stackrel{t}{y}$ was damned: for Achan the some of Charmi the sonne of Sabdi the some of Seral, of $\mathfrak{y}$ trybe of Iuda, toke some of it ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ was daned. So there wente vp , of the people rpon a thre thousande men, and they fled before the men of Hai, and they of Hai smote vpon a syxe and thyrtie men of them, and chaced them from the porte rnto Sebarim, and smote them downe the waye. Then was the hert of the people discoraged, ${ }^{+}$and became like water. What wylt thou do then wito thy greate name?

- : Re. 16.1. a Deut.7. e. Iosu. 6. d. 2 Ma. 12. f.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Iosua: Stode vp, why lyest thou so vpon thy face? Israel hath offended, and traisgressed ouer my conenaunt, which I commaunded the. They haue taken also of the thinge that was damned, and haue stollen, and dyssembled, and layed it amonge their omamentes. The children lof Israel are not able to stonde before their aduersaries, but must turne their backes vpon their enemies: for they are acursed. I wyll no more be with you from hēce forth yf ye put not out the dainned from amonge you.

Stonde vp, and sanctifie the people, and saye: ${ }^{6}$ Sanctifie youre selues agaynst tomorow for thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: $\ddagger$ There is a damned thinge in the $O$ Israel, therfore canst thou not stonde before thine enemies, tyll ye put awaye the dammed from amonge you. And ye shall ryse rp early, one trybe after another : and loke which trybe so euer the LORDE taketh, the same shall come forth, one kynred after another: and loke which kynred the LORDE taketh, the same shall come forth, one house after another. And loke what house the LORDE taketh, the same shal come forth, one housholder after another. And who so euer is founde in $\dot{y}$ curse, the same shalbe burnt in the fyre with all that he hath: because he hath gone beyonde the couenaunt of the LORDE, and committed folye in Israel.

Then losua gat him rp by tymes in the mornynge, and brought forth Israel, one trybe after another, and $\dot{\dot{y}}$ trybe of Iuda was taken. And whan he had brought forth the kynreds in luda, $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ kinred of the Serahites was taken. And whan he had brought forth the kynred of the Serahites, one housholde after another, Sabdi was taken. And whā he had brought forth his house, one housholder after another, Achan the sonne of Charmi $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Sabdi the sonne of Serah of the trybe of Iuda, was taken.

And Iosua sayde vnto Achan: My sonne, geue the glory rnto the LORDE the God of Israel, and gene him the prayse, and tell me, what thou hast done, and lide nothinge fro me.

Then answered Achan vuto Iosua, and sayde: Verely I baue symned agaynst $\hat{y}$ LORDE God of Israel, thus a thus haue i done: l sawe amōge y spoiles a costly Babilonish garment, and two hūdreth Sycles of

Then Iosua sent messaungers thither, which ranne to the tente, and beholde, it was hyd in his tente, and the siluer vnder it. And they toke it out of the tente, and broughte it vnto losua, and to all the children of Israel and poured it before the LORDE. Then Iosua and all Israel with him, toke Achan the sonne of Serah with the siluer, the garment and goldè tunge, his sonnes and doughters, his oxen and asses, and shepe, and all that he had broughte they in to $\dot{y}^{\circ}$ valley of Achor.

And Iosua sayde: For so moch as thou hast troubled vs, the LORDE trouble the this daye. And all Israel stoned him, and burned him with fyre with all that he had. And whan they had stoned him, they made ouer him a greate heape of stones, which remayneth vnto this daye. (So the LORDE turned from the rigorousnes of his wrath.) Therfore is the same place called $\dot{y}$ valley of Achor vnto this daye.

So Iosua sent them awaye, a they wente vito the place of the preny watch, and laye betwixte Bethel and Hai, on the west syde of Hai. But Iosua abode that night amoge the people. And in the mornynge he arose early, and set the people in order, and wente vp with the Elders of Israel before the people towarde Hai: and all the men of warre that were with him, wente vp , a gat them forth, and came ouer agaynst the cite, and pitched their tentes on the north syde of Hai, so $\mathbf{y}^{t}$ there was but a valley betwene him and Hai.

He had taken aboute a fyue thousande men, and set them in the hynder watch betwene Bethel and Hai, on the west syde of the eite, and they ordred the people of the whole hoost that was on the north syde of the cite, so that the vttemost of the people reached vito the west ende of the cite. So Iosua wente the same nighte in to the myddes of the valley.

But whan the kynge of Hai sawe that, he made haist, and gat him vp early, and the men out of the cite, to mete Israel to $\dot{y}$ battayll, with all his people, enen righte before the felde: for he wyst not that there was a preuy watch behynde him on the backe syde of the cite. But Iosua and all Israel were feble before them, and fled by the waye to y wyldernesse. Then eried all the people in the cite, that they shulde folowe rpon them, and they folowed after Iosua and ruszshed out of the cite, so that there remayned not one man in Hai and Bethel, which wente not out to folowe vpon Israel, and they lefte the cite stondinge open, that they mighte persecute Israel.

Thē sayde ${ }^{\circ}$ LORDE vnto Iosua: Reach out the speare that thou hast in thine hande, towarde Hai: for I wyll delyuer it in to thy hande. And whan İosua reached out the speare that was in his hande, towarde $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ cite, $\dot{y}$ hinder watch brake vp out of their place, and ranne (whan he had stretched out his hande) and came in to the cite, and wanne it, and made haist, a set fyre vpon it. And the men of Hai turned them, and loked behynde them, and the smoke of the cite wente yp towarde heanen, and they had no place to flie into, nether hither ner thither: and the people that fled towarde the wyldernes turned aboute, to folowe vpon them.

And whan Iosua and all Israel sawe, $\frac{y}{y}$ the hyoder wateh had wome the cite (for $\hat{y}$ smoke of the cite ascended) they turned againe, and smote the men of Hai. And they in the cite came forth also agaynst them, so $y$ they came in the myddes amonge Istael on both the sydes, and they slewe them, so that there was not one man of them left ouer or escaped: and they toke the kynge of Hai alyue, and broughte him vinto Iosua. And whā Israel had slayne all the inhabiters of Hai, which had folowed yon them in the felde and in the wildernesse: and whan they were all fallen thorow the edge of the swerde, tyll they were destroied, the turned all Israel vito Hai, and smote it with the edge of $\hat{y}$ swerde. And of all them whieh fell that daye fro man vnto womi, there were twolue thousande, all men of Hai.

But Iosua withdrue not his hande (wherwith he reached out the speare) tyll all the imhabiters of Hai were stterly destroyed, * sauynge the catell and the spoyle of $\frac{8}{y}$ eite, dyd Israel parte amonge them selues, acordinge vnto the worde of the LORDE, which he comaunded Iosua. And Iosua burned vp Hai and made an heape therof for euer, which is there yet ruto this daye. And the kynge of Hai caused he to be hanged on a tre vintyll the euen.
${ }^{a}$ But wha the Sonne was gone downe, he commaunded to take his body from the tre, and to east it vnder the gate of the cite, and made rpon him a greate heape of stones, which is there yet voto this daye.
${ }^{b}$ Then buylded Iosua an altare unto the LORDE God of lsrael tpon mount Ebal acordinge as Moses the seruaunt of $\hat{y}$ LORDE commaunded the children of Israel, as it is wrytten in the boke of the lawe of Moses enen an altare of whole stone, wherspon there was no yron lifted: and he offred burntofferinges and healthofferinges, and there vpon the stones he wrote the seeonde lawe of Moses, which he wrote before the childre of Israel.

Afterwarde caused he to proclame all the wordes of the lawe of the blessynge and cursynge, as it is wrytten in the boke of the lawe. There was not one worde that Moses commaunded, but Losua caused it to be proclamed before all the congregacion of Israel, and before the weme, and children, and straugers which walked amonge them.

Cibe ir. Chapter.

NOW whan all the kynges that were beyonde Iordane vpon the mountaynes, and in the lowe countrees, $\tau$ in all the hauens of the greate see, and besyde mount Libanus, herde this (namely, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ Hethites, Amorites, Cananites, Pheresites, Heuites, and Iebusytes) they gathered the selues together with one aeorde, to fighte agaynst losua, and agaynst Israel.

But whan the imhabiters of Gibeon herde, what Iosua had done with lericho and Hai, they dealte craftely, wēte on their waie, and made a message, and toke olde sackes rpon their asses, and olde rente wyne botels, and olde mended shues vpon their fete, and put on olde and peced garmentes, and all $\mathfrak{y}$ bred of their iytayles was harde and moulde, and they wente unto Iosua in to $\dot{y}$ hoost at Gilgall, and sayde vuto him, and to enery man in Israel: We are come out of a farre countre, therfore make now a couenaunt with vs. Then sayde euery man in Israel vnto $\hat{\mathrm{y}}$ Heuyte: Peraduenture thou dwellest amonge rs, how can I then make a couenaunt with the?

They saide vnto Iosua: We are thy seruaūtes. losua sayde unto them: What are ye, a whence come ye? They sayde: Thy seruauntes are come out of a very farre countre, because of the name of the LORDE thy God: for we have herde the reporte of him, and all that he dyd in Egipte, and all that he dyd unto the two kynges of the Amorites beyōde lordane, Sihon the kynge at Heszbō, and Og the kynge of Basan, which dwelt at Astaroth. Therfore sayde oure

Elders and all the inhabiters of oure countre : Take fode with you for youre iourney, and go mete them, and saye into them: We are youre seruaūtes, therfore make now a bonde with vs: This oure bred that we toke out of oure houses for oure foode, was new whan we toke oure iourney towarde you: but now lo, it is harde © moulde. And these bottels fylled we new, and lo, they are rēte. And these oure clothes and shues are waxed olde, by $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ reason of the sore longe iourney.

Then the captaynes toke their vytayles, and axed not the mouth of the LORDE. *And Iosua made peace with them, and set vp a couenaunt with them, that they shulde be saued alyue, and the rulers of the congregacion sware vnto them. But thre dayes after that they had made a couenaunt with them, they herde, that they were their neghbours, and dwelte amonge them: For as the children of Israel wente forth on their iourney, they came on the thirde daye vito their cities, which are called Gibeon, Caphira, Beeroth, and Cirath Iearim, and smote the not, because that the rulers of the congregacion had sworne mnto them by the name of the LORDE the God of Israel.

But whan all the congregacion murmured agaynst the rulers, all the rulers sayde vnto the whole congregacion: We haue sworne vnto them by the LORDE the God of Israel, therfore maye we not touch them. But this wil we do vnto them: Let them lyue, that there come no wrath vpon vs, because of the ooth that we hane made vnto them.

And the rulers sayde vito them: Let them lyue, that they maye be thewers of wodd and bearers of water for the whole congregacion, as the rulers haue sayde vnto them. Then Iosua called them, and commened with them, and sayde: Wherfore haue ye disceaued vs, and sayde, that ye were farre from vs, where as ye dwell amonge vs? Therfore shall ye be cursed, so that of you there shall not ceasse seruauntes to hew wodd and to beare water for the house of my God.

They answered Iosua, a sayde: It was tolde thy seruauntes, that the LORDE thy God commaunded Moses his seruaunt, that he shulde geue you the whole lole, and that he wolde destroye all the inhabiters of the londe before you: therfore were we sore afrayed of [^234]oure lyues before you, and thus hane we done. But now lo, we are in thy handes: loke what thou thinkest good and righte to do vuto vs, that do.

And he dyd euen so vnto them, and delynered them from the children of Israels hāde, that they shulde not slaye them. So vpō the same daye Iosua made them hewers of wodd and water bearers for the congregacion, and for the altare of the LORDE vito this daye, in the place that he shall chose.

WIIAN Adonisedech the kynge of Ierusalem herde, that losua had wome Hai, and dammed it, and done vnto Hai and y kynge of it, like as he dyd muto Ierieho and to the kynge therof, $\ddagger$ and that they of Gibeon had made peace with Israel, and were come vnder them, they were sore afrayed. For Gibeon was a greate cite, like as one of the kynges eities, and greater then Hai, and all the citesyns therof were meu of armes. Therfore sent he vnto Hoham the kynge of Hebron, and to Pirea the kynge of larmuth, and to Iaphia the kynge of Lachis, and to Debir the kynge of Eglon, and caused to saie voto them: Come up vinto me, and helpe me, that we maie smyte Gibeon, for they haue made peace with Iosua and the children of Israel. Then came the fyue kynges of the Amorites together, and wente vp, the kynge of lerusalem, the kynge of Hebron, $\dot{y}$ kynge of lamuth, the kynge of Lachis, the kynge of Eglon, with all their armies, $ฺ$ layed sege rnto Gibeon, and foughte agaynst it.

Howbeit they of Gibeon sent vnto Iosua to Gilgall, and caused to saye vuto him: Withdrawe not thine hande from thy seruauntes, come vp soone vato vs: delyuer and helpe vs, for all the kynges of the Amorites that dwell vpon the mountaynes, are gathered together agaynst vs. Iosua wente vp from Gilgall, and all the warryers and all the men armes with him. And the LORDE sayde vito losua: §Feare them not, for I haue geve them in to thy hande. There shall not one of them be able to stonde before the. So Iosua came sodenly vpon them, for all that night wente he vp from Gilgall. "And the LORDE discomfyted the before Israel, and smote them with a greate slaughter at Gibeon:

[^235]© they chaced them the waie downe to Beth Horon, and smote them vito Aseka and Makeda.

And whan they fled before Israel, the waye downe to Bethoron, the LORDE caused a greate hayle from heauen to fall voon them, vnto Aseka, so that they dyed: ז many mo of them dyed of the hayle, then the children of Israel slewe with the swerde.

Then spake losua vito the LORDE (the same daye that the LORDE gaue ouer the Amorites before the children of Israel) and sayde in the presence of Israel: *Somne, holde styll at Gibeon, and thou Moone in the valley of Aialon.

Then the Sonne helde styll, and $\dot{y}$ Moone stode, untyll the people had anenged the selues on their enemies. Is not this wrytten in the boke of the righteous? Thus the Sonne stode styll in the myddes of beauen, and dyfferred to go downe for the space of a whole daye after. And there was no daye like vnto this (nether before ner after) whan the LORDE herkened vito the voyee of one man: for the LORDE fought for Israel. And Iosua wente agayne to Gilgall in to the tetes, and all Israel with him. As for the fyue kynges, they were fled, and had hyd the selues in the cane at Makeda.

Then was it tolde Iosua: We have foüde the fyue kynges hyd in the caue at Makeda. Iosua sayde: Rolle greate stones then before the hole of the eaue, and set men there to kepe them.

As for you, stonde not ye styll, but folowe after youre enemies, and smyte them behynde, and let them not come in their cities, for the LORDE youre God hath delyuered the in to youre hande. And whan Iosua and $y$ children of Israel had ended the sore greate slanghter vpō them, so $\frac{t}{y}$ they were brought to nanght, the remnaunt of them came in to the stronge eities.

So all the people came agayne to the hoost vnto Iosua to Makeda in peace, and no man durst mone his tunge agaynst the children of Israel. Iosua sayde: Open the mouth of the calle, and brynge the fyue kynges forth vnto me. They dyd so, and broughte the kynges minto him out of the cane : the kinge of Terusalem, the kynge of Hebrō, the kynge of larmuth, the kynge of Lachis, the kinge of Eglon.

[^236]Whan these fyue kynges were broughte forth vnto him, Iosua called enery man of Israel, and sayde vito the rulers of the men of warre that wente with him: Come forth and treade vpon the neckes of these kynges with youre fete. And they came forth, and trode vpon their neekes with their fete. And losua saide vnto them: Be not afrayed, and feare not: be stronge and bolde, for thus shal the LORDE do vato all youre enemies, agaynst whom ye fighte.

And Iosua smote them afterwarde, and put them to death, and hanged them vpon fyue trees. And they hanged styll ypon the trees vntyll the euenynge. + But whan the Sonne was gone downe, he commaunded to take them of from the trees: and they cast them in the caue, wherin they had hyd them selues, © before the hole of the caue they layed greate stones, which are there yet vnto this daye. The same daye wanne losua Makeda also, and smote it with the edge of the swerde, and the kynge therof, and $\ddagger$ damned it, and all the soules that were therin, and let none remayne escaped: and dyd vnto the kynge of Makeda $\S$ as he dyd vnto the kynge of Iericho.

Then Iosua and all Israel with him departed fro Makeda vnto Lybna, © foughte agaynst it. (And the LORDE gaue it with $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ kynge therof in to the hande of Israel) and smote it and all the soules that were therin, with the edge of the swerde, and let not one remayne in it : and dyd vnto the kinge therof as he had done vnto the kynge of Iericho.

Afterwarde wente Iosua and all Israel with $\mathbf{y}$ him from Lybna vnto Lachis, and layed sege unto it, and fought agaynst it. And the LORDE delyuered Lachis also in to the hande of Israel, so that they wanne it upon the seconde daye, and smote it with $\dot{y}$ edge of the swerde, and all the soules that were therin, acordinge to all as he had done into Lybna. At the same tyme Horam ${ }^{\circ}$ kynge of Gazer wente vp, to helpe Lachis. But Iosua smote him with all his people, tyll there remayned not one.

And Iosua wente with all Israel from Lachis, unto Eglon, and layed sege unto it, and fought agaynst it, and wanne it the same daye, and smote it with the edge of the swerde, and damned all the soules that were therin the [^237]same daye, acordynge vnto all as he had done vnto Lachis.

After that wente Iosua with all Israel from Eglon vnto Hebron, and foughte agaynst it, and wanne it, and smote it with yi edge of the swerde, and the kynge of it, and all the eities therof, and all the soules that were therin, and let not one remayne, acordynge vnto all as he had done vnto Eglon : and damned it, and all the soules that were therin.

Then turned losua agayne with all Israel towarde Debir, and fought agaynst it, and wanne it, with the kinge of it, and all y eities therof, and smote them with the edge of the swerde, and damned all $\dot{y}$ soules that were therin, and let not one remayne ouer. Euen as he had done vnto Hebrō and Lybua with their kynges, so dyd he also vnto Debir, and the kynge therof.

Thus Iosua smote all the londe vpon the mountaynes, and towarde the south, and in the lowe countrees, and by the ryuers, with all their kynges, and let not one remaine ouer and damned all that had breth, *as the LORDE God of Israel had commaunded. And Iosua smote them from Cades Bernea vnto Gaza, and all the londe of Gosen vnto Gibeon, and toke all these kynges with their lōde at one tyme: for the LORDE God of Israel foughte for Israel. And Iosua wente agayne with all Israel to the tentes vnto Gilgal.

The ri. Chapter

${ }^{2}$ WHAN Iabin the kynge of Asor herde this, he sent vnto labob the kynge of Madon and to the kynge of Samron, and to the kynge of Achsaph, and to the kynges that dwelt towarde the north vpon the mountaynes, and in the playne on the southsyde of Cineroth, and in the lowe countrees, and in the lordshippes of Dor by the see syde: and to the Cananites towarde $\dot{y}$ east and west, to $\dot{y}$ Amorites, Hethites, Pheresites, and Iebusites, vpon the mountaynes and to the Heuites, vnder mount Hermon in the londe of Mispa. These wete out with all their armies, a greate people, as many as $\dot{y}$ sonde of the see, and exceadinge many horses and charettes. All these kinges gathered the selues, and came, and pitched together by $\hat{y}$ water of Meram, to fighte with Israel.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Iosua: Feare them not, for tomorow aboute this tyme wil I delyuer them all slayne, before the children of Israel: thou shalt lame their horses, and burne their charettes with fire. +And Iosua came sodenly vpon them, and all the men of warre with him by the water of Merom, a fell vpon them. And the LORDE delyuered them in to $y$ handes of Israel, and they smote them, and chaced them vnto greate Sido and to the warme water, and to the playne of Mispa towarde ${ }^{\circ}$ east: and smote them, vntyll there remayned not one.

Then dealte Iosua with them as $\hat{y}$ LORDE had saide vito him, a lamed their horses, a brent their eharettes. And he turned backe at the same tyme, a wanne Hasor, a smote y kynge of it with the swerde (for Hasor was afore tyme $\mathrm{y}_{\mathrm{y}}$ head cite of all these kyngdomes) and smote all the soules that were therin with the edge of the swerde, and damned it, a let nothinge remayne that had breth, a damned Hasor with fyre. All the cities of these kyngdomes wāne Iosua also, and smote the with the edge of the swerde, and damned them, $\ddagger$ acordinge as Moses the seruaunt of the LORDE commaunded.

Howbeit the cities that stode vpon the hilles, dyd not the children of Israel burne with fyre: but Hasor onely dyd Iosua burne. § And all the spoyles of these cities and the catell, dyd the children of Israel deale amonge them, but smote all the men with the edge of the swerde, tyll they had destroyed them, and let nothinge remayne that had breth. As the LORDE commaunded his seruaunt Moses, and as Moses commaunded Iosua, euen so dyd Iosua, so that there was nothinge vndone of all that the LORDE comaunded Moses.

So Iosua toke all this löde rpon y moūtaynes, $x$ all $\dot{y}$ lyeth towarde the south, © all the londe of Gosen, and the lowe countre, $\mathfrak{a}$ the playne felde, and the mountayne of Israel with the valley therof, from the mountayne that parteth the londe vp towarde Seir, vinto Baalgad, in the playne of mount Libanus beneth mount Hermon. All their kynges toke he, and smote them, and put thè to death. $\|$ Howbeit he warred a longe season with these kynges.

Yet was there not one cite, that yelded it $\ddagger$ selfe peaceably vnto the children of Israel * (excepte the Heuites, which dwelt at Gibeon)

[^238]but thes waune them all with battayll. And this was done so of the LORDE that their hert was so hardened, to come against the children of Israel with battayll, $\dot{y}$ they mighte be daned, a no fanoure to be shewed vito them, but to be destroyed, * as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

At the same tyme came Iosua, and roted out the Enakims from $\hat{y}$ mountayne, from Hebron, from Debir, from Anab, from euery mountayne of Iuda, and from euery mountayne of 1srael, and damned the with their eities, and let none of the Enakims remayne in the londe of the children of Israel, sate at Gasa, tat Gath, at Asdod, there remayned of them.

Thus losua conquered all the londe acordinge vnto all as the LORDE sayde vnto Moses, © gaue it vuto Israel to enheritaunce ${ }^{\ddagger}$ rnto euery trybe his porcion, and $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ londe rested from warre.

And the lot fell vpon the kynred of the Kabathites, and the children of Aaron the prest amonge the Leuites, had by the lott thyrtene cities of the trybe of Iuda, of the trybe of Simeon, and of the trybe of Ben Iamin. The other childre of Kahath of the same kynred, had by the lot ten cities, of the trybe of Ephraim, of the trybe of Dan, and of the halfe trybe of Manasse.

But the children of Gerson of the same kynred had by the lot thyrtene cities, of the trybe of Isachar, of the trybe of Asser, of $\dot{y}$ trybe of Nepthali, and of the halfe trybe of Manasse at Basan.

The children of Merari of their kynred had twolue cities, of the trybe of Ruben, of the trybe of Gad, and of the trybe of Zabulon. So the children of Israel gaue these cities and their suburbes vnto the Leuites by lott, as the LORDE commaunded by Moses.

Of the trybe of the children of Iuda, and of the trybe of the children of Simeon, they gaue these cities (which they named by name) vnto the children of Aaron of the kynred of the Kahathites amonge the children of Leui: for the first lot was theyrs.

So they gaue them Kiriatharba, which was the fathers of Enak, that is Hebron vpor the mount Iuda, and the suburbes therof rounde aboute. $\dagger$ But the felde of the cite and the vyllages therof, gane they muto Caleb the sonne of Iephune for his possession.

Thus gaue they vnto the children of Aaron the prest, the fre cite of the deed sleyers, Hebron and the suburbes therof, Libna and the suburbes therof, Iathir and the suburbes therof, Esthuma and the suburbes therof, Holon and the suburbes therof, Debir and the suburbes therof, Ain and the suburbes therof, Iuta and the suburbes therof, Beth Semes and the suburbes therof, euen nyne cities of these two trybes.

But of the trybe of Ben Iamin they gaue foure cities, Gibeon and $\dot{y}$ suburbes therof, Gaba, and the suburbes therof, Anathot and the suburbes therof, Almon and the suburbes therof: so that all the cities of the children of Aaron the prest were thirtene with their suburbes.

The kynreds of the other children of Kahath the Leuites, had by their lott foure cities, of the trybe of Ephraim, and they gaue the the fre cite of the deedsleiers, Seche and the suburbes therof vpon mount Ephraim Gaser [^242]and the suburbes therof, Kibzaim and the suburbes therof, Bethron and the suburbes therof.

Of the trybe of Dan foure cities, Eltheke and $\hat{y}$ suburbes therof, Gibthon and the suburbes therof, Aialon and the suburbes therof, Gath Rimon and the suburbes therof. Of the halfe trybe of Manasses two cities, Thaenach and the suburbes therof, Gath Rimon and the suburbes therof: so that all the cities of the other children of $y$ kynred of Kahath, were ten with their suburbes.

But vito the children of Gerson amonge the kynreds of the Leuites were geuen, Of the halfe trybe of Manasse two cities, the fre eite for the deedslayer, Gola in Basan and the suburbes therof, Beasthra, and the suburbes therof. Of the trybe of Isachar foure cities, Kision and the suburbes therof, Dabrach and the suburbes therof, Jarmuth and the suburbes therof, Engannim and the suburbes therof. Of the trybe of Asser foure cities, Miseal, Abdon, Helkath and Rehob with the suburbes therof. Of the trybe of Nephtali thre cities, the fre cite Kedes (for the deedsleyer) in Galile, Hamoth, Dor, and Karthan with the suburbes therof: so that all the cities of the kynred of the Gersonites were thirtene with their suburbes.

Snto the kynreds of Merari the other Leuites were geuen, Of the trybe of Zabulon foure cities, lakneam, Kartha, Dimna and Nahalal with y suburbes therof. Of the trybe of Ruben foure cities, Bezer, Iahza, Kedemoth and Mephaat with their suburbes. Of the trybe of Gad foure cities, the fre cite for the deedsleyer, Ramoth in Gilead, Mahanaim, Heszbon and laeser with their suburbes: so that all the cities of the children of Merari amonge their kynreds of $\dot{f}$ other Leuites, were twolue. Thus all the cities of the Leuites amonge $\hat{y}$ possession of the children of Israel, were eight and fortye with their suburbes. And these cities were so dealte out, that euery one had their suburbes rounde aboute, the one as the other.

Thus the LORDE gaue the children of Isracl all the londe, which he had sworne unto their fathers to geue: © they toke possession of it, and dwelt therin. And the LORDE gave the rest before all those $\frac{t}{y}$ were aboute them *like as he sware vnto their fathers, a none of their enemies stode agaynst the , but all their enemies delyuered he in to their hande. And their myssed nothinge of all the good that the LORDE had promysed unto the house of Israel, it came euery whyt.

THEN losua called $\mathfrak{y}$ Rubenites and Gaddites, and $\dot{y}$ halfe trybe of Manasse, and sayde vnto them: Ye haue kepte all, that Moses the seruaunt of the LORDE commaunded you, and haue herkened vnto my voyce in all $\dot{y}$ I haue commaūded you. Ye haue not forsaken youre brethrē a longe season, vnto this daye, and haue wayted ypon the commaundement of the LORDE youre God. For so moch now as the LORDE youre God hath broughte youre brethre to rest, as he promysed them, turne you now, and go youre waye to youre tentes in to the londe of youre possession, which Moses the seruaunt of the LORDE gaue you beyōde Iordane.

But take diligent hede now, that ye do acordinge to the commaundement and lawe which Noses the seruaunt of the LORDE hath commaunded: $\ddagger$ That ye loue the LORDE youre God, and walke in all his wayes, and kepe his commaundementes, and cleue vnto him, and serue him with all youre hert and with all youre soule. So losua blessed them, and let them go. And they wente vnto their tentes.

Vnto the halfe trybe of Manasse had Moses geuen possession at Basan: vnto the other halfe gaue losua amonge their brethren on this syde Iordane westwarde. And whan he let them go to their tentes and blessed them, he sayde unto them: Ye come home agayne with greate good unto youre têtes, with exceadynge moch catell, syluer, golde, brasse, yron and rayment, $\bar{\delta}$ distribute therfore the spoyle of youre enenyes amonge youre brethren.

So the Rubenites, Gaddites, and the halfe trybe of Manasse returned, and wente from the children of Israel out of Silo (which lyeth in the londe of Canaan) to go in to the countre of Gilead to the londe of their possession, that they mighte possesse it, acordynge to the commaundement of the LORDEby Moses.

And whan they came vnto the heapes by Iordane, which lye in the londe of Canaan, the same Rubenites, Gaddites, and the halfe trybe of Manasses buylded there besyde Iordane, a fayre greate altare. But whan the children of Israel herde saye: Beholde, the children of Ruben, the children of Gad, and the halfe trybe of Manasse haue buylded an altare ouer agaynst the londe of Canaan vpon the heapes by Iordane on this syde the children of Israel, they gathered them selues together with the whole congregacion at Silo, to go vp agaynst the with an armye. And (in the meane season) they sent to them in to the londe of Gilead, Phineas the sonne of Eleasar the prest, and with him tell chefe prynces amonge the houses of their fathers, out of euery tribe in Israel one. And they came to the children of Ruben, to the children of Gad, and to the halfe trybe of Manasse in the londe of Gilead, and sayde :

Thus sayeth the whole congregacion of the LORDE vnto you: * What trespace is this, $\mathrm{t}_{\mathrm{y}}$ ye haue trespaced agaynst the God of Israel, that ye shulde turne backe from ${ }^{\circ}$ LORDE this daye, to builde you an altare, for to fall awaye from the LORDE?

+ Hane we not ynough of the wickednesse of Peor? from the which we are not yet clensed this daye, and there came a plage amonge the congregacion of the LORDE: and ye turne you backe this daye from the LORDE, and this daye are ye fallen awaye from the LORDE, that he maye be wroth to daye or tomorow at the whole congregacion of the LORDE.

If the londe of youre possession be vncleane, then come ouer in to the londe that the LORDE possesseth, where the dwellynge of the LORDE is, and take possessions amonge vs, and fall not awaye from the LORDE and from vs, to builde you an altare without the altare of the LORDE oure God. $\ddagger$ Did not Achan the sonne of Serah trespace in the thinge that was damned, and the wrath came ouer $\dot{y}$ whole congregacion of lsrael and he wente not downe alone for his myszdede?
Then answered the children of Ruben, and the children of Gad, and the halfe trybe of Manasse, and sayde vnto the heades and prynces of Israel: The mightic Gody LORDE, the mightie God the LORDE knoweth, and Israel knoweth also, yf this be a trangressynge or trespacynge agaynst the LORDE, then let it not helpe vs this daye: Yf we haue buylded the altare, because we wolde turne awaye backe from the LORDE, to offre burnt-

[^243]offerynges or meatofferinges theron, or to make eny deedofferynges vpon it, then let the LORDE requyre it: And yf we haue not done it rather for very feare of this thinge, and sayde: To daye or tomorow mighte youre children saye vnto oure children:

What haue ye to do with the LORDE the God of Israel? The LORDE hath set lordaue for a border betwene vs and you ye children of Ruben and Gad, ye have no porcion in the LORDE: By this shulde youre children make oure children to turne awaye from the feare of the LORDE.

Therfore sayde we: Let vs make oure children an altare, not for sacrifice, ner for burntofferinge, §but that it maye be a toke betwene rs and you, and oure posterities, that we maye serue the LORDE in his sighte with oure burntofferinges, deedofferinges, and other offeringes: and $\frac{t}{y}$ youre children to daye or tomorow neade not to saye vuto oure children : Ye haue no parte in the LORDE.

And we sayde: But yf they shulde speake so vito vs, or to oure posterities to daye or tomorow, then maye we saye: Beholde the symilitude of $y$ altare of the LORDE, which oure fathers made, not for sacrifyce, ner for burntofferynge, but for a wytnesse betwene vs and you.

God forbydde, that we shulde fall awaye from the LORDE, to turne backe from him this daye, and to buylde an altare for sacrifice, for burntofferinge and for eny presente, without $\hat{y}$ altare of the LORDE oure God, that stondeth before his Habitacion.

But whan Phineas the prest, and the chefe of the congregacion, the prynces of 1srael which were with him, herde these wordes, that the children of Ruben, Gad, and Manasse had spoken, they pleased them well. And Phineas the sonne of Eleasar the prest sayde vnto the children of Rubē, Gad and Manasse: This daye we knowe, that $f$ LORDE is amonge vs, in that ye have not trespaced agaynst the LORDE in this dede. Now haue ye delyuered the children of Israel out of the hande of the LORDE.

Then Phineas the sonne of Eleasar the prest, and the rulers returned out of the londe of Gilead, from the children of Ruben and Gad vnto $y$ londe of Canaa to the children of Israel, and brought them worde agayne of the matter.

Then were the children of Israel well cōtente with the thinge. And they praysed the God of Israel, and sayde nomore that they wolde go up agaynst them with an armye, to destroye the londe that the childre of Ruben and Gad dwelt in. And y childre of Ruben and Gad called the name of the altare: This altare be witnesse betwene $v s$, that the LORDE is God.

$\mathfrak{A}$ AND after a longe season, whan the LORDE had broughte lsrael to rest from all their enemies rounde aboute : and Iosua was now olde and well strieken in age, he called all Israel and their Elders, heades, iudges, and officers, and sayde vnto them : I am olde and well aged, and ye haue sene all that the LORDE youre God hath done mito all these nacions in youre sighte. For the LORDE youre God himself hath foughte for you. Beholde, I have parted amonge you $\dot{y}$ renaunt of the nacions by lot, vnto euery trybe his enheritaunce from Iordane forth, and all the nacions whom I have roted out vnto the greate see westwarde.
And the LORDE youre God shal thrust them out before you, and dryue them awaye from you, that ye maye have their londe in possession, as the LORDE youre God hath promysed you. Be stroge now therfore, that ye maye obserue and do all that is wrytten in the boke of the lawe of Moses: * so that ye turne not asyde from it, nether to the righte hande ner to the lefte: that ye come not amonge ${ }^{\circ}$ remnaunt of these nacios, which are with you: And se that ye make no mencion ner tsweare by the names of their goddes, nether serue them, ner bowe youre selues vnto them: But cleue vnto the LORDE youre God, as ye haue done vnto this daye: the shal the LORDE dryue awaye greate and mightie nacions before you, like as there hath no man bene able to stonde before you unto $\mathfrak{C}$ this daye. $\ddagger$ One of you shall chace a thonsande: for the LORDE youre God fighteth for you, acordinge as he promysed you. Beholde, Il this daye do I go the waye of all the worlde, and ye shal knowe euen from all youre hert and from all youre soule, that there hath not fayled one worde of all the good that the LORDE youre God promysed you. And yf ye go youre waye and serue other goddes, and worshipe thee, then shall the wrath of the LORDE waxe whote ouer you, a shall shortly destroye you out of the good londe, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he hath geuen you.

IOSUA gathered all the trybes of Israel together vnto Sichem, and called the Elders of Israel, the heades, iudges and officers. And whā they were come before God, he sayde rnto all the people: Thus sayeth the LORDE the God of Israel:  Youre fathers dwelt afore time beyōde $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ water, Abrahā a Nahor with Tarah their father a serued other goddes. t+'Then toke I youre father Abraham beyonde the water, a caused him to walke in the londe of Canaan, © multiplied his sede, and gave him Isaae, ${ }^{b}$ and vnto Isaac 1 gave Lacob and Esau, and gaue Esau mon̄t Seir to possesse. As for Iacob, a his childrē, they wente downe in to Egipte.

Then sent 1 Moses and Aaron, and plaged Egipte ${ }^{c}$ as I haue done amonge thē. After $\dot{y} \$ \stackrel{b}{ }$ brought I you and youre fathers out of Egipte. And whan ye came to $\ddot{y}$ see, and the Egipeians folowed vpon youre fathers with charettes and horse men vito the reed see, then eryed they vnto the LORDE, which put a darcknesse betwene you and the Egipeians, and broughte the see rpon them, and ouerwhelmed them. And youre eyes haue sene

[^245]serue the LORDE：for he is an holy God， mightie，and gelous，which spareth not youre trangressions and synnes．But yf ye forsake the LORDE，and serue a strannge god，then shall the LORDE turne him，and do you euell，and consume you，after that he hath done you good．The people sayde into Iosua： Not so，but we will serue the LORDE．Then sayde Iosua vito the people：Ye are wit－ nesses ouer youre selues，that ye haue chosen you the LORDDE，to serue him．And they sayde：Yee．Then put awaye from you（sayde be）the straunge gooldes $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ are anionge you， and enclyne youre hert vnto the LORDE the God of Israel．And the people sayde vnto lo－ sua：We wyll serue the LOR DE oure God，and be obedient muto his voyce．§So Iosua made a couenaunt with the people $\dot{y}$ same daye，and laied statutes $\tau$ lawes before them at Sichem．

And losua wrote this acte in the boke of the lawe of God，${ }^{d}$ and toke a greate stone，$\pi$ set it yp there vnder an oke，which was in $\hat{y}$ Sanctuary of $\frac{g}{y}$ LORDE，and sayde vnto all the people：Beholde，this stone shall be wit－ nesse ouer you：For it hath herde all the wordes of the LORDE，which he hath spoken moto vs，and shall be a witnesse ouer you，that ye denye not youre God．So Iosua let the people go euery one to his enheritaūce．

AFTER the death of Iosua the children of Israel axed the LORDE, and sayde: Who shall go vp a be oure captayne of warre against ẙ Cananites? The LORDE sayde: Inda shall go vp. * Beholde, I haue delyuered the londe in to his hande. Then sayde Iuda vnto his brother Simeon: Go up with me in to my lot, and let vs fighte against the Cananites, then wyl I go agayne with the in to thy lot: So Simeon wente with him.

Now whan Iuda wente vp the LORDE delyuered the Cananites and Pheresites in to their haides, © they slewe tē thousande me at Besek: a they foüde Adoni Besek at Besek, I foughte agaynst him, and slewe the Cananites and Pheresites. But Adoni Besek fled, and they folowed after him: and whan they had ouertaken him, they cut of the thobes of his handes and fete.

Then sayde Adoni Besek: Thre score and ten kynges with the thombes of their hādes a fete cut of, gathered vp the meate $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{t}}$ was lefte vader my table. †Now as I haue done, so hath God rewarded me agayne. And he was broughte vito Ierusale, where he dyed.

But $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ childrē of Iuda foughte agaynst Ierusalem, and wāne it, $\ddagger$ and smote it with the edge of the swerde, and set fyre spon the cite. Then wente the children of İsrael downe, to fighte agaynst $\dot{f}$ Cananites, $\stackrel{f}{y}$ dwelt vpon the mount, and towarde the south, and in the valleys. §And Iuda wente agaynst the Cananites, which dwelt at Hebron. (As for Hebron, it was called Kiriatharba afore tyme) and they smote Sesai, a Achiman, and Thalmai.

And from thence he wente agaynst $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ inhabiters of Debir (but Debir was called Kiriath Sepher aforetyme.) And Caleb sayde: $\|$ He y smyteth Kiriath Sepher, a wymeth it, I wyl geue him my doughter Achsa to wife. 'Then Athniel the sonne of Kenas, Calebs yongest brother wane it. And he gaue him his doughter Achsa to wife. And it fortuned $\stackrel{t}{y}$ whan they wēte in, she was counceled of hir houszbande, to axe a pece of londe of hir father. And she fell from the asse. [^247]me a blessynge, for thon hast geuen me a south a drye londe, geve me also a watery londe. Then gaue he her a londe that was watery a boue and beneth.

And the childre of $y$ Kenyte Moses brother in lawe, wente rp out of the ${ }^{5}$ palme cite, with the children of Iuda in to the wyldernesse of Iuda, that lyeth on $\dot{y}$ south syde of the cite Arad:  and wente their waye, a dwelt amonge the people. And Iuda wente with his brother Simeon, they smote the Cananites at Zephath, (t damned them, a called the name of the cite Horma. ${ }^{a} \quad t+$ Iuda also wame Gasa with the borders therof, a Ascalon with hir borders, a Accaron with the coastes therof. And the LORDE was with Iuda, so that he conquered the mountaynes: but them that dwelt in the valley coulde he not conquere, because they had yron charettes. And acordinge as Moses had sayde, they gane Hebron vito Caleb, which drone out the thre somnes of Enak. ${ }^{b} \quad \ddagger \ddagger$ Howbeit ${ }^{\circ}$ children of Ben Iamin droue not out ${ }^{\circ}$ Iebusites which dwelt at Ierusalem, but y Iebusites dwelt amonge the children of Ben Iamin at Ierusalem vnto this daye.

Likewyse the children of Ioseph wete vp also vnto Bethel, 'a the LORDE was with thē. And the house of Ioseph spyed out Bethel (which afore tyme was called Lus) and the watch men sawe a man goinge out of the cite, and saide vnto him: Shewe vs where we maye come in to the cite, 傢 we wyll shewe mercy vpon the. And whan he had shewed them where they mighte come in to the cite, they smote $\frac{y}{y}$ cite with the edge of the swerde: but they let the man go t all his frendes.

Then wēte the same man vp in to $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ comntre of the Hethites, a buylded a cite, and called it Lus, a so is the name of it yet rnto this daye. But whan Israel was mightie, he made the Cananites tributaries, and droue them not out.

[^248]${ }^{a}$ In like maner Ephraim droue not out $\dot{y}$ Cananites that dwelt at Gaser, but the Cananites dwelt amonge them at Gaser.

Zabulon also drone not out the iuhabiters of Kitron and Nahalol, but $\mathfrak{y}$ Cananites dwelt amonge them, © were tributaries.

Asser droue not out $\mathfrak{y}$ inhabiters of Aco, a $\dot{f}$ imhabiters of Sidon, of Ahelab, of Achsib, of Helba, of Aphik of Rehob, but y Asserites dwelt amoge the Cananites that dwelt in the lode, for they droue the not out.

Nephtali droue not out $\hat{y}$ inhabiters of Beth Semes, ner of Beth Anath, but dwelt amonge the Cananites whieh dwelt in the londe: howbeit they of Beth Semes and of Beth Anath were tributaries.

And the Amorites subdued the childre of Dan rpon the mountaine, and suffred them not to eome downe in to the valley. And the Amorites beganne to dwell ypō mount Heres at Aiolon and at Saalbim. Howbeit $\mathscr{y}$ hande of $y$ house of loseph was to sore for them, and they became tributaries. BU'T there came vp a messañger of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ LORDE from Gilgall vito Bochim, and sayde: I hane caried you vp hither out of Egipte, and broughte you in to the londe that I sware unto youre fathers, ot saide: *I wyl neuer breake my conenaunt with you, that ye shulde make no conenament with the indwellers of this londe, but breake downe their altares: Neuertheles ye hane not herkened vnto my voyce. Wherfore hane ye done this? Then saide I morouer: I wil not dryue them out before you, that they maye be a fall vato you, and their goddes a snare. And whan $\hat{y}$ messaunger of the LORDE had spoken these wordes vuto all the ehildren of lsrael, the people lifte vp their voyce, a wepte, and called $\frac{8}{y}$ name of the place Bochim, and offired there vato the LORDE.

For whan Iosua had sente awaye $\mathfrak{y}$ people, and the childre of Israel were gone, euery one to his enheritaūce, for to take possession of the londe, the people serued the LORDE as longe as losua lyued and y Elders, whieh lyued longe after losua, and $\frac{t}{y}$ sawe all the [^249]greate workes of the LORDE, which he dyd for Israel.

Now whan losua the somne of Nun, the seruaunt of the LORDE, ${ }^{b}$ was deed (whan he was an hudreth and ten yeare olde) they buried him in $y$ border of his inheritaunce at Timnath Heres vpon mount Ephraim on the north syde of mount Gaas. And whan all the same generacion was gathered voto their fathers, there came vp after them another generacion, which knew not the LORDE, ner the workes that he had done for Isracl.
'Then wroughte the children of Israel euell before the LORDE, and serued Baalim, and forsoke $\hat{y}$ LORDE the God of their fathers (which broughte them out of the londe of Lgipte) and folowed other goddes a the goddes of the nacions that dwelt rounde aboute them, t worshipped them, a displeased the LORDE: for they forsoke $\hat{y}$ LORDE euer more and more, and serued Baal and Astaroth.

Then $y$ wrath of the LORDE waxed whote vpo Israel, $\pi$ he delyuered the in to $\hat{y}$ handes of those ${ }_{y}^{t}$ spoyled the $\bar{e}$, that they mighte spoyle them, a solde the in to the handes of their enemies roude aboute, a they were not able to withstonde their enemies eny more, but what waye so euer they wolde out, $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ häde of the LORDE was agaynst the to their hurte (euen as the LORDE d sayde and sware vnto them) and they were sore oppressed.

Now whan the LORDE raysed them vp iudges, which helped them out of the hande of soch as spoyled the , they folowed not the iudges nether, but wente a whoringe after other goddes, a worshipped them, and were soone gone out of $\stackrel{g}{y}$ waye $\frac{t}{y}$ their fathers walked in, to heare the comaundementes of the LORDE, a dyd not as they dyd.

But whan $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE raysed vp iudges moto them, the LORDE was with $\dot{y}$ iudge, and helped them out of the hande of their enemies, as longe as the iudge lyued. $\ddagger$ For the LORDE had pitie of their complaynte, which they made ouer those $\dot{\mathrm{t}}$ subdued the and oppressed them.

Neuertheles whan the iudge dyed, they turned backe, 'and marred all more the their fathers, so that they folowed other goddes to serue them and to bowe them selues vato them: they wolde not fall from their purposes, ner from their obstinate waye.

Therfore waxed the wrath of the LORDE allwaie so whote ouer Israel, that he sayde: For so moch as the people haue transgressed my couenaunt, whieh I commaunded their fathers, a folowe not my voyce, I wil from hence forth dryue out none of the Meythen, whō Iosua lefte behynde him, whā he dlyed, * that by them I maye proue Israel, whether they wil kepe the waye of the LORDE, to walke therin, as their fathers dyd, or not. Thus the LORDE suffred all these nacions, so that in a shorte tyme he droue them not out, whom he had not geuen ouer in to Iosuas hande.

THESE are the nacions, whom the LORDE suffred to remayne, $\dot{y}$ by them he mighte proue Israel, which had no vaderstondinge in the warres of Canaan: onely beeause $\frac{t}{y}$ the trybes of the childre of Israel might knowe a lerne to warre, which afore had no knowlege therof, namely: The fyue lordes of $\hat{y}$. Philistynes, $\pi$ all the Cananites, a Sidonians, a the Hethites $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ dwelt ypon mount Libanus, fro mount Baal Hermon, vntyll a man come vnto Hemath. The same remayned, that Israel mighte be proued by them, that it mighte be knowne whether they wolde herken to the commaundementes of the LORDE, which he commaunded their fathers by Moses.

Now whan the children of Israel dwelt thus amōge the Cananites, Hethites, Amorites, Pheresites, Heuites © Iebusites, t they toke their doughters to wyues, and gaue their doughters moto their sonnes, a serned their goddes, and wroughte wickednes before the LORDE, a forgat the LORDE their God, a serued Baalim $\mathfrak{c}$ Astaroth. Then $\mathfrak{y}$ wrath of y LORDE waxed whote ouer Israel, a he solde the vuder the haide of Cusan Risathaim kynge of Mesopotamia, a so $\dot{y}$ childré of Israel serued Cusan Risathaim viij. yeare.
The eried the childree of Israel vnto the LORDE, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ the LORDE raysed the vp a sauioure which delyuered the, namely, $\ddagger \Lambda$ thniel $\dot{y}$ some of Kenas, Calebs yongest brother. And the sprete of the LORDE cane vpon him, $\mathfrak{x}$ he was iudge in Israel, a wente out a

But the children of Israel dyd yet more euell before the LORDE. Then the LORDE streugthed Eglon the kynge of $y$ Moabites agaynst $\dot{y}$ childre of Israel, because they wrought wickednesse before $\underset{y}{\circ}$ LORDE. And he gathered unto him $\dot{y}$ childrē of Ammon, t the Amalechites, a wéte and smote Israel, and conquered the $\|$ cite of the palme trees. And the children of Israel serued Eglon $\hat{y}$ kynge of $\dot{y}$ Moabites eightene yeare. The eried they vnto the LORDE. And the LORDE raysed the vp a sauioure, namely Ehud the some of Gera $\dot{y}$ sonne of Iemini, which was a man that mighte do nothinge with his righte hande.

And whā the childrē of Israel sent a present by him ruto Eglon the kynge of the Moabites, Ehud made him a two edged dagger of a spanne longe, a gyrded it vuder his garmēt vpō his righte thye, a broughte ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{g}}$ present vnto Eglon the kynge of $\mathfrak{y}$ Moabites. As for Eglon, he was a very fat man.

And whan he had delyuered the presente, he let the people go that had earied the present, and he himselfe turned backe from the Idols at Gilgall, a eaused to saye thus (vnto the kynge:) I haue a secrete thinge to tell the O kynge. And he commaunded to kepe sylence, a all they that stode aboute him, wente out from him.

And Ehud came in vnto him. He sat in a syled Sommer perler, which was for him selfe alone. And Ehud saide: I haue somwhat to saye vnto the of God. The rose he vp fro his seate. But Elud put forth his lefte hande, a toke the dagger from his righte thye, a thrust it in to his bely, so $\frac{t}{y}$ the hefte wente in also after the blade, a the fatt closed the hefte: for he drue not $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ dagger out of his bely, a $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ fylthines departed frö him. But Ehud gat him out at the backe dore, © put to $\mathfrak{y}$ dore after him, and loekte it.

Now whan he was gone, his seruauntes eame in, and sawe that the dore of the Sommer perler was lockte, and they sayde: peraduenture he is gone to the preuye in the syled Sommer perler.

But whin they had wayted so loge tyll they were ashamed (for no man opened the perter (lore) they toke the keys, and opened it. Beholde, then lave their lode deed yon the earth. As for Shut, he was gotten away, while they made so longe tariese, $\mathbb{a}$ he went our by the Idols, and rance his wave vito Seirath.

And what he came in * he blew yo trompe vp op mount Ephraim, and the children of Israel wente with him from the mount, and he before them, and be said vito them: Folowe me, for the LORDE hath delyuered the Noabites your enemies in to youre hade. And they followed him, t wane $\dot{y}$ fere of Iordane, $\frac{t}{}$ goth toward Moab, $\pi$ suffered no man to go our, and at $\hat{y}$ same lyme they smote of the Moabite vpō a ten thousande men, all nobles and men of ames, so that there escaped not one. Thus were the Moabites brought vader the hade of the children of Israel at that tyme, and the lode was in rest fore score yeares.

Afterwarde was + Sambar yo sone of Snath, which slews size hundreth Philistynes with an oses gadd, and detyuered Israel also.

BUT the children of Israel dy yet more euell before $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE, what Ehud was deed. And the LORDE solde the in to the hade of Sabin the kynge of the Cananites, which dwelt at Hazor, © the chefe captayne of his hooste was Sissera, and he dwelt at Haroseth of the Heythen. And the children of Israel cried unto the LORDE: for he had nyne hïdreth gyron charettes, and subdued the children of Israel by violence twenty yare.
At y same time was Iudgesse in Israel the prophetisse Debbora, the wyfe of Lapidoth, and she dwelt vader yo palme of Debbora betwene Rama t Bethel, upon mount Ephraim, and the children of Israel came up vito her to the lave. She sent forth, $\ddagger \mathbb{C}$ called for Barak the sane of Abr Noun of Kedes Nephtali, and sade vito him: Hath not $\hat{y}$ LORDE the God of Israel commanded the: Go thy wave, and get the vp unto mount Thabor, $\pi$ take with the ten thousand men of the children of Nephtali © Zabulon? For I wit make Sissera the chafe captayne of latins host to come to the vito $\dot{y} \&$ water of [^251]|Tyson, with his charettes and with his multitude, and I wall delyuer him in to thy hade. Barak sayde unto her: If thou wilt come with me, I wi go: but ff thou wilt not come with me, I wi not go.

She sayde: I well go with the: neuerthelase the prase shat not be thine in this iourney that thou goest, but $\stackrel{8}{ }$ LORDE shat delyuer Sissera in to a woman hade. So Debbora gat Mir vp, and went with Barak vito Kedes. Then Barak called Zabulon and Nephtali unto Kedes, and wēte on fore with ten thousand men. And Debbora went with him also. As for Heber the Kenyte he was departed from the Kenytes from the children of $\mid$ Hobab Moses brother in lave, and had pitched his tent by y Oke of Zaanaim besyde Kedes.

Then was it tolde Sissera, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ Barack the sonne of Ali Noā, was gone vp vito mount Thabor: a he gathered all his charettes together, nyse C. yron charettes, a all the people $\stackrel{\dot{y}}{y}$ was with him from Haroseth of the Heythé, unto the water Cyson. Debora sayde unto Barak: Vp, this is the date wherin the LORDE hath delyuered Sissera in to thy hands: for $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ LORDE shat go forth before $\dot{y}$. So Barak went fro mount Thabor, and y ten thousande men after him.

But the LORDE discomfited Sissera with all his charettes $\mathbb{\pi}$ boost, $\pi$ made the arrayed of the edge of the swede before Bark, so $\underset{y}{t}$ Sissera leapte of his chart, a fled on fote. Neuerthelesse Barak folowed upon the charetted © the hoost vito Haroseth of the Heythen, $\tau$ all Sisseras boost fell throw ${ }^{\circ}$ edge of the swede, so $\frac{t}{y}$ not one escaped. As for Sissera, he fled on fore vito the tent of Jael, $\mathfrak{y}$ wife of Heber $\mathfrak{y}$ Kente. For there was peace betwene kynge Iabin at Hasor, at the house of Hebert the Kenite.

Jael wite forth to mete Sissera, a sayde unto him: Turne in my lode, turne in to me, a be not arrayed. And he turned in unto her in to the tented, $\mathbb{\pi}$ she couered him with a garmēt. He sade vito her: I prays ${ }^{\circ}$ gene me a lithe water to drynke, for I am a thyrst. - The opened she a mylke pot, © gate him to drynke, and conered him. But whā Barak folowed after Sissera, Iael wente for to mete him, and sayde vnto him: Come hither, I wil shewe the the man, whom thou sekest. And whan he came in vnto her, he sawe Sissera deed, © the nale stickinge in his temples. Thus God broughte downe Iabin the kynge of the Cananites before the children of Israel at that tyme, a the hande of the ehildren of Israel wente a subdued labin $\hat{y}$ kynge of the Cananites, tyll they had roted him out. $A$ND whan the children of Israel dyd euell in the sighte of the LORDE, the LORDE delyuered them vnder the hande of the Madianites vij. yeares. And whä the hande of the Madianites was to mightie ouer the children of Israel, the children of Israel made them clyffes in $\dot{y}$ mountaynes, and caues and holdes, to defende them selues from $\dot{y}$ Madianites. And whan Israel sowed eny thinge, $\hat{y}$ Madianites and Amalechites, and the children towarde the south came vp vpon them, and pitched their tētes agaynst then, and destroyed the increase of the londe downe vnto Gasa, $\boldsymbol{\tau}$ let nothinge remayne ouer of the beestes in Israel, nether shepe, ner oxen, ner asses. For they came $\mathrm{yp}_{\mathrm{p}}$ with their catell and tentes, as it had bene a greate multitude of greshoppers (so that nether they ner their camels mighte be nombred) and fell in to the londe, that they mighte destroye it. Thus was Israel exceadinge small before the Madianites. Then cried the children of Israel vito the LORDE.

But whan they cried wnto the LORDE becarse of $\hat{y}$ Madianites, $\hat{y}$ LORDE sent the a prophet, which sayde vnto thé: Thus saieth

[^252]the LORDE the Gorl of Israel: I caried you out of Egipte, a broughte you out of $\mathfrak{y}$ house of bondage, a delyuered you from the hande of the Egipeians, © from the hāde of all them that oppressed you, and I haue thrust them out before you, © geuen you their lōde and sayde rnto you: I am the LORDE youre God. * Feare not ye the goddes of the Amorites, in whose londe ye dwell: neuertheles ye haue not herkened vnto my voyce.
And there came an angell of the LOMDE, a sat him downe vider an Oke at Aphra, which belonged rnto Ioas the father of $\dot{y}$ Esrites, and his some Gedeon was throsshinge wheate in the barne, that he mighte flye awaye before the Madianites.
Then appeared vnto him the angell of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE, and sayde vnto him: The LORDE with $\hat{y}$ thou mightie giaunte. But Gedeon sayde vnto him: Syr, yf the LORDE be with vs, wherfore is all this then happened vinto vs? And where are all the wonders, which oure fathers tokle rs, a sayde: The LORDE brought vs out of Egipte? But now hath the LORDE forsaken vs, and delyuered vs in to the hande of the Madianites.
The LORDE turned him rnto him, a sayde: Go thy waye in this thy strength, thou shalt delyuer Israel out of the hande of $\hat{y}$ Madianites. I haue sent the. But he sayde: My LORDE, wherwithall shal I delyuer Israel? Beholde, my kynred is the smallest in Manasse, a I am the leest in my fathers house? The LORDE sayde vnto him: I will be with the, so $\dot{y}$ thou shalt smyte the Madianites, euen as though they were but one man.

He sayde vnto him: Yf I haue foūde grace in thy sighte, then make me a token, that it is thou, which speakest with me: go not awaye, tyll I come to $\dot{y}$, and brynge a meatofferynge, to set before the. He sayde: I wyll tary, tyll thou cōmest agayne. And Gedeon wēte, and made ready a kydd, and an Epha of vnleuended floure, and layed the flesh in a maunde, and put the broth in a pot, and broughte it forth vito him muder the Oke, and came nye. But the angell of God sayde vuto him: + Take the flesh and the vnleuended bred, $\mathbb{\imath}$ set it vpon the stonye rocke that is here, and poure the broth theron. And he dyd so. Now whā Gedeon sawe that it was an angell of y LORDE, he sayde: ${ }^{a} \mathrm{O}$ LORDE LORDE, haue I thus sene an angell of $\dot{y}$ LORDE face to face? The LORDE sayde vnto him: Peace be with the, feare not, thou shalt not dye. Thē Gedeon buylded an altare there vnto $\frac{8}{y}$ LORDE, a called it: The LORDE of peace. And in y same uight sayde $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE vnto him: Take a fedd bullocke frō amōge thy fathers oxen, a another bullocke of seuen yeare olde, and breake downe the altare of Baall which is thy fathers, and cut downe the groue that stondeth by it, and buylde thou an altare vnto the LORDE thy God aboue vpon the toppe of this rocke, and make it ready, and take the other bullocke, and offre a burntofferynge with the wodd of the groue that thou hast hewen downe. Then toke Gedeon ten men of his seruauntes, and dyd as $\dot{y}$ LORDE sayde vnto him: but he was afrayed to do this by daye tyme, for his fathers house and the people in $\frac{9}{9}$ eite, and so he dyd it by nighte.

Now whan the people in the cite rose vp early in the mornynge, beholde, Baals altare was broken, and the grone hewen downe by it, and the other bullocke a burntofferynge vpon the altare that was buylded, a one sayde vnto another: Who hath done this? And whan they soughte a made searehe, it was sayde: Gedeon the sonne of Ioas hath done it. The sayde the people of y eite vnto loas: Brynge forth thy sonne, He must dye, because he hath broken Baals altare, and hewen downe the groue therby. But loas sayde vnto all them that stode by him: Wyl ye stryue for Baal? Wil ye delyuer him? He y stryueth for him, shal dye this mornynge. Yf he be God, let him auēge him selfe, beeause his altare is broken downe. From ${ }^{t}$ daye forth was he called Ierubaal, because it was sayde:

THEN Ierubaal (that is Gedeon) gat him vp early, ${ }^{b}$ and all the people that was with him, and pitched their tentes besyde the well of Harod, so that he had the hoost of the Madianites on the north side behynde the hyll of More in the valley. But the LORDE sayde vnto Gedeon: The people that be with $\dot{y}$ are to many for me to delyuer Madian in to their hande, lest Israel boost them selues agaynst me, and saye: My hande hath delyuered me. Cause a proclamacion now to be made in the eares of the people, and saye: 5 He that feareth, and is afrayed, let him turne backe, and get him soone fro mount Gilead. Then returned there of the people aboute a two and twenty thousande so that there was left but ten thousande.

The people are yet to many: brynge them downe to the water, there wyl 1 proue them for $\dot{y}$ : and of whom I saye that he shal go with the, the same shal go with the: but of who I saie that he shal not go with the, the same shall not go. And he broughte the people vito $\hat{y}$ water. And the LORDE sayde rnto Gedeon: Whosoeuer licketh of the water with his tuge, as a dogg licketh, make him stonde asyde and lykewyse who soeuer falleth downe vio his knees to drynke. Then was the nombre of them that had licked out of the hande to the mouth, thre hundreth men. And the LORDE sayde vinto Gedeon: Thorow the thre hüdreth which haue licked, wyl I delyuer you, and geue oner the Madianites in to thy harle: As for the other people, let them go euery one vinto his place.

And they toke vytayles with them for $y$ people, and their trompettes: but the other Israelites let he go, euery one vnto his tente. And he strengthed himselfe with the thre hunrreth men, and the Madianites hoost laye before him beneth in the valley. And the same night sayde the LORDE vnto him: Vp, and go downe in to the hoost, for I haue geuen them ouer in to thy hande. But yf thou be afrayed to go downe, then let thy seruaunt Pura go downe with the vnto the hoost, ${ }^{5}$ thou maiest heare what they saie: after that shalt thou be bolde, and thy honde stronge, that thou mayest go downe in to the hoost.

Than wente Gedeon downe with his seruaunt rito $\dot{y}$ vttemost parte of $\dot{y}$ watchmé of armes $\stackrel{t}{y}$ were in y hoost. And $\hat{y}$ Madianites and Ainalechites, and all the children of the south, had layed them selues beneth in the valley, as a multitude of greshoppers, and their Camels were not to be nombred for multitude, euē as the sonde on $\dot{y}$ see shore. Now whan Gedeon came, beholde, one tolde another his dreame, i sayde: Behotde, I hane dreamed a dreame: Me thoughte a bake harlye lofe came rollinge downe to $\dot{y}$ hoost of y Madianites: and whan it came to the tente, it smote it, and ouerthrew it, and turned it rpyde downe, so that the tente fell. Then answered the other: 'That is nothinge els then $\hat{y}$ swerde of Gedeon the some of loas if Isratite: (iod hath geue oner the Madianites with all the hoost in to his hande.
the interpretacion of it, he worshipped, and came agayne in to the hoost of Israel, and sayde: $\mathrm{V}_{\mathrm{p}}$, for the LORDE hath delyuered $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ hoost of the Marlianites in to youre hāde. And he deuyded the thre hundreth men in to thre partes, and gaue euery one a trompet in his hande, and emptye pytehers, and lampes therin, and sayde vito them: ${ }^{a}$ Loke mnto me, and do ye eué so, and beholde, whā I come to the rttemost parte of the hoost, euen as I do, so do ye also. Whan I blowe $y$ trompet, and all that are with me, then shal ye blowe $y$ trōpettes also rounde aboute all the hoost, and saye: Here the LORDE © Gedeon. Thus came Gedeon and the thre hundreth men with him vnto the rttemost parte of y hoost (aboute the tyme whan the mydwatch begynneth) and waked tp the watehme, and blewe with the trompettes, and smote asunder the pitchers in their handes.

So all the thre companies blewe with $\dot{y}$ d trompettes, and brake the pitchers. But the lampes helde they in their lefte hande, and the trompettes in their righte hāde, so that they blewe, and cried: Here the swerde of the LORDE and Gedeon. And euery one stode in his place aboute the hoost. Then rame all the hoost, and cried and fled. And whyle the thre hundreth men blewe the trompettes, $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ LORDE broughte it so to passe, that * euery mans swerde in all $\frac{\mathrm{f}}{\mathrm{y}}$ hoost was agayust another, and the hoost fled vnto Bethsitha Zereratha, and vato the border of the playne of Mehohab besyde Tabath. And $\dot{y}$ men of Israel of Nephtali, of Asser, $\tau$ of Manasse cried, and folowed vpon the Madianites.

And Gedeon sent messaungers rp rato all mount Ephraim, sayenge : Come downe against the Madianites, and stoppe the water from them vnto Beth Bara and Iordane. And then eryed all they that were of Ephraim, and stopped the water from them vnto Bethbara and Iordane, and toke two prynces of the Madianites Oreb and Zeb, and slewe Oreb rpon the rocke of Oreb, and Zeb in the wrnepresse of Zeb, and folowed rpon the Madianites, and broughte the heades of Oreb and Zeb, suto Gideon ouer Iordane.

vs, that thou hast not ealled vs, whā thou wentest forth to fight agaynst if Madianites? and they chode sore with him. But he sayde vnto them: What haue I done now that is like youre acte? Is not the aftergadderynge of Ephraim better then the whole haruest of Abieser? ${ }^{a}$ God hath delyuered $\dot{y}$ prynees of the Madianites Oreb and Zeb in to youre hande, how coulde I do that ye haue done? Whā he had sayde this, their blast was swaged from him.

Now whan Gedeon eame vnto Iordane, he wente ouer with the thre hundreth me that were with him, and they were weery, and folowed vpon their chace. And he sayde vato the men of Sucoth: I praye you geue the people that are with me, some loaues of bred (for they are weery) that I maye folowe ypon Zebea and Salmana the kinges of the Madianites.

But the rulers of Sucoth sayde: Are the handes of Zebea and Salmana in thy handes allready, that we must gene bred vnto thy men of warre? Gedeon sayde: Well, whan the LORDE delyuereth Zebea and Salmana in to my hade, I wyll threszshe youre flesh with thornes of the wyldernesse and with breares. And from thence he wente vp vato Penuel, and spake euen so vinto them. And the mé of Penuel gaue him like answere as they of Sueoth. And he sayde also vnto the men of Penuel: Yf I come peaceably agayne, I wil breake downe this tower.

As for Zebea and Salmana, they were at Karkar, and their hoost with them vpon a fyftene thousande, which were all that were lefte of the whole hoost of the children of the Easte: for there were fallen an hundreth and twentye thousande, that coulde drawe the swerde.

And Gedeon wente vp by the waye, where they dwell in the tentes on the east side of Nobah and lakbeha, as smote the hoost, for the hoost was earelesse, and mystrusted nothinge. And Zebea and Salmana fled, but he folowed after them, and toke ${ }_{y}^{\circ}$ two kynges of the Madianites Zebea and Salınana, and put all the hoost in feare.
Now whan Gedeon $\dot{y}$ sonne of loas came agayne fro the battayll out of $\hat{y}$ east, he toke a lad of the men of Sucoth, a examyned him, which wrote him vp the names of the rulers of Sueoth, and their Elders, euē thre score and seuentene men.

And he came to the men of Sucoth, a sayde: Beholde, here is Zebea a Salmana, cōcernynge whō ye laughed me to seorne, a sayde: Are the handes of Zebea and Salmana in thy hīdes all ready, that we must geue bred vato thy men which are weery? And he toke the Elders of the eite, and thornes out of the wildernes, and breres, and caused $\hat{y}$ men of Sucoth to be torne therwith. * And the tower of Penuel brake he downe, and slewe the men of the eite.

And he saide vnto Zebea and Salmana: What maner of mé were they who ye slewe at Thabor? They sayde: They were euen like the, $\pi$ goodly men, as yf they had bene a kynges childrē. He sayde: They were my brethren, euen my mother sonnes: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, yf ye had lette them lyue, I wolde not slaye you.

And he saide vnto his first borne sonne Iether: Stonde vp, a slaye them. Howbeit the lad drue not out his swerde, for he was afrayed, for so moch as he was yet but a lad. Zebea a Salmana sayde: Stonde thou vp, a slaye vs, for as the man is, soch is also his strēgth. So Gedeon arose, and slewe Zebea and Salmana, and toke the ornamentes that were aboute their Camels neekes.

Then sayde certayne in Israel vnto Gedeon: Be thou lorde ouer vs, thou and thy sonne, and thy somnes sonne, for so moch as thou hast delyuered vs from $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ hande of $\dot{\mathrm{y}} \mathrm{Ma}$ dianites. Neuertheles Gedeon saide vnto them: I wil not be lorde oner you, nether shal my sonne be lorde ouer you, but the LORDE shalbe lorde ouer you.

Gedeon sayde vnto them: One thinge I desyre of you, Euery man geue me the earinge that he hath spoyled. (For in so moch as y men were Ismaelites, they had earinges.) They sayde: Them wyll we geue the. And they spred out a cloth, and enery man east the earinge theron that he had spoyled. And the golden earynges which he requyred, had in weight, a thousaude and seuen hundreth Syeles of Golde, besyde the spanges and cheynes, and scarlet rayment which the kynges of the Madianites dyd weere, and besyde the neckbandes of their Camels. And Gideon made a cote armoure therof, and set it in his cite at Aphra. And all Israel wente there a whoringe alter it, and it turned to an occasion of fallinge vato Gedeon and his house.
6 Thus were fi Madianites brought downe before the children of Israel, and lifte up their heade nomore: and the londe was in rest fortye yeares, as loge as Gedeon lyued.

And lerubaal the sonne of loas wēte a dwelt in his house. ${ }^{a}$ And Gedeon Had thre score a ten somnes, which were come out of his thye: for he had many wyues. And his concubyne which he had at sichē, bare him a sonne also, whom he ealled Abimelech. And Gideon the some of loas dyed in a good age, $\boldsymbol{\pi}$ was buried at Aphra in $\stackrel{8}{y}$ sepulere of his father loas the father of the Esrites.

But whan Gedeon was deed, the childre of Israel turned backe, and wente awhoringe after Baalim, and made a couenaunt with Baal Berith, ${ }_{y}^{t}$ he shulde be their God. And $\dot{y}$ childrē of Israel thoughte not on y LORDE their God, which had delyuered them fro the hande of their enemies rounde aboute: and they shewed not merey vnto the house of lerubaal Gedeon, acordinge to all the good that he had done vinto Israel.

of Millo gathered them selues together, and wente and made Abimeleeh kynge by the Oke that stondeth at Siehem.

Whan this was tolde lotham, he wente, and storle vpon the toppe of mount Grisim, and lifte vp his voyce, cried, and sayde: Heare me ye men of Sichem, that God maye heare you also. *'The trees wente to anointe a kinge ouer them, and sayde vnto the Olyue tre: Be thou oure kynge. ## the waye, and wente vnto Ber, and dwelt there because of his brother Abimelech.Now whan Abimelech had reigned thre yeare ouer Israel, *God sent an euell mynde betwene Abimelech and the men of Sichem (for the men of Sichem despysed Abimelech), and rehearsed the wronge done to the somnes of Ierubaal, and their bloude, and layed it vpon Abimelech their brother which slewe them, and ypon the men of Sichem that strengthed his hande therto, that he mighte slaye his brethren.

And the men of Sichem set an hynder watch vpon the toppes of the mountaynes, and spoyled all them that walked nye them by the waye, and it was tolde Abimelech. But there came Gaal the sonne of Ebed and his brethren, and entred in to Sichem, and the men of Sichem put their trust in him, and weete out in to the felde, and gathered their vynyardes, and pressed them, and made a daunse, and wente in to their gods house, and ate and dranke, and cursed Abimelech.

And Gaal y sonne of Ebed sayde: Who is Abimelech? and what is Sichem, that we shulde serue him? Is he not the sonne of Ierubaal, and hath set Sebul his seruant ouer the men of + Hemor the father of Sichem? Wherfore shulde we serue him? Wolde God the people were vnder my hāde, $\stackrel{ \pm}{\mathrm{y}}$ I mighte put downe Abimelech.

And it was tolde Abimelech: Increace thine hooste, and departe. For Sebul the chefe ruler of the cite, whan he herde the wordes of Gaal y sonne of Ebed, he was wroth fully displeased, and sente message secretly to Abimeleeh, and caused to saye ruto him: Beholde, Gaal the some of Ebed and his brethren are come to Sichem, and make the cite to be agaynst the.

Arise therfore by nyght, thou and thy people that is with the, and laye wayte for the in the felde: and tomorow whan the Sonne aryseth, get the vp soone, and fall ypon the cite: and yf he and the people that is with him come out vato the, the deale with him, as thyne hande fyndeth.

Abimelech stode vp by night, and all the people that was with him, and layed wayte for Sichem with foure companies of men of warre. And Gaal the sonne of Ebed wēte out and stode at the dore of the gate of the cite.

[^254]But Abimelech gat him vp ont of the hinder watch, and the people that was with him. Now whan Gaal sawe the people, he sayde vnto Sebul: Beholde, there commeth a people downe from the toppe of $\dot{y}$ mount. Sebul saide vnto him: Thou seist $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ shadowe of the mountaines as though they were mē. Gaal spake yet more and sayde: Beholde, there commeth a people downe from ${ }^{\circ}$ myddes of the londe, a one bonde of men cometh by the waye to $\dot{y}$ witch Oke. The sayde Sebul: Where is now thy mouth $\frac{t}{y}$ sayde: Who is Abimelech, that we shulde serue him? Is not this y people, whom thou hast refused? Go forth now, and fighte with him.

Gaal wente forth before the citesyns of Sichem, and foughte with Abimelech. But Abimelech chaced him, so that he fled, and there fell many slayne euen vinto the gate of the cite. And Abimeleeh abode at Aruma. But Sebul droue awaye Gaal and his brethren, so that they must not remayne at Sichem. Vpon the morowe wente the people forth in to ${ }_{y}^{\circ}$ felde. Whā this was tolde Abimelech, he toke the people, and parted them in to thre bodes of men, and wayted for the in the felde. Now whan he sawe $\frac{t}{y}$ the people wète out of the eite, he rose agaynst the, and smote them.

Abimelech and y company of men that was with him, fell ypon them, and stepte vito the dore of the porte: but the other two companies fell rpon all them that were in the felde, and slewe them. The foughte Abinelech agaynst the cite all $\dot{y}$ same daye, and wanne it, and slewe the people that was there in, and brake downe $\frac{8}{y}$ eite, and sowed salt theron.

Whan all the men of the tower of Siehem herde this, they wente in to a stronge holde of $\hat{y}$ house of their God Berith. But whan Abimelech herde, that all the men of the tower of Sichem had gathered the sehues together, he wente vp vnto momt Zehmon, and all the people that was with him, and toke an axe in his hāde, and hewed downe a braunch of a tre, and toke it yp , t layed it ypon his shulder, and sayde vnto all the people that was with him : $\ddagger$ As ye haue sene me do, make ye haist, and do euen so as I. Then all the people hewed downe euery one a branch, and folowed Abimelech: and they layed them to the holde, and set fyre upon them agaynst them and the holde: and all the men of the tower of Sichem dyed thorow the smoke and fyre, spon a thousande men and wemen.
As for Abimelech, he wēte vnto Thebetz, and layed sege vnto it, and wanne it. But in. the myddes of the cite, there was a stronge tower, vnto the which all the men and wemen, and all the citesyns of the cite fled, and shutt it after them, and clymmed rp to the toppe of the tower. Then cane Abimelech vito the tower, and foughte agaynst it, and came nye vnto the dore of the tower, that he might burne it with fyre. *But a woman cast a pece of a mylstone ypon Abinelechs heade, and brake his brane panne. Then Abinelech in all the haist, called the seruaunt that bare his wapen, and sayde rnto him: Drawe out thy swerde, ${ }^{,}$and kyll me, that it be not sayde of me: A woman hath slayne him. Then his seruaunt thrust him thorow, and he dyed. Whan the Israelites which were with him, sawe, $\dot{y}$ Abimelech was deed, they gatt them awaye euery onc vnto his awne place.

Thus God recompenced Abimelech the euell that he had done vnto his father, whā he slewe his thre score and ten brethren: like wyse all the euell of the men of Sichem, dyd God rewarde them tpon their heade: and so the + curse of Iotham $\dot{y}$ sonne of Ierubaal came ypon them

©he r. Chapter.

AFTER Abimelech there rose vp another sauioure in Israel, Thola a man of Isachar, and the sonne of Pua, the soune of Dodo. And he dwelt at Samir rpō the mount Ephraim, and indged Israel thre and twentye yeare, and died, and was buried at Samir.

After him stode vp one Jair a Gileadite, and iudged Israel two and twentye yeare, and had thirtie somnes, $\ddagger$ rydinge vpon thirtie asses foales: and had thirtie cities, whose names are Hauoth Iair (that is, the cities of Iair) rnto this daye, and lye in Gilead. And Iair dyed, and was buried at Camon.
But the children of Israel wrought wickednes in the sighte of the LORDE, and serued Baalim and Astaroth, and the goddes of Siria, and the goddes of Silon, and the gordes of Moab, and the goddes of $\dot{y}$ children of Ammon, and the goddes of the Philistines, and forsoke y LORDE, and serued lim not. Then was $\hat{y}$ wrath of $\hat{y}$ LORDE fearce vpon Israel, and he gaue the ouer vnder the hāde of the Philistynes, and of the children of Ammō. And they vexed and oppressed $\mathfrak{y}$ children of Israel eightene yeare longe, all the children of Israel that were beyonde Iordane in the londe of the Moabites, which lyeth in Gilead. The children of Ammon also wente ouer Iordane, and fought agaynst Iuda, Ben Iamin, and agaynst the house of Ephraim, so that Israel was very sore troubled.

Then cryed the children of Israel vnto the LORDE, and sayde: We haue synned agaynst the, for we haue forsaken oure God, a serued Baalim. But the LORDE sayde vnto the childrē of Israel: Did not the Egipciās, the Amorites, the children of Ammon, $\mathfrak{y}$ Philistines, the Sidonians, the Amalechites and Maonites oppresse you, and I helped you out of their hande, whan ye cryed vnto me? Yet haue ye forsaken me, and serued other goddes? Therfore wyll I helpe you nomore. §Go youre waye, and crye vpon the goddes whom ye have chosen, let them helpe you in the tyme of youre trouble.
But the childrē of Israel sayde vnto the LORDE: We haue synned, do thou vnto vs what pleaseth the, onely delyuer vs at this tyme. And they put the straunge goddes frō them, and serued the LORDE, And his soule had pytie on the mysery of Israel.

And the children of Ammon called them selues together, and pitched in Gilead: But the children of Israel gathered them selues together also, and pitched at Mispa. And $\dot{y}$ people of the chefest of Gilead sayde amōge them selues: Who so euer begynneth to fight agaynst the children of Ammon, shalbe heade ouer all them that dwell in Gilead.

Ebe ri. Chapter.

IEPHTHAE a Gileadite was a valeañt man of armes, but an harlottes childe. Gilead begat Iephthae. But whan the wyfe had borne clildren rnto Gilead, and the same wyues childrē were waxē greate, they thrust out Iephtae, and sayde vnto him : Thou shalt not be heire in oure fathers house, for thou art another womas some. The fled he from his brethrē, and dwelt in the londe of Tob. And there resorted vnto him vagabīdes, and wête out with him. And after a certayne tyme foughte the children of Ammon with Israel.

Now whā the childrē of Ammon foughte thus with Israel, the Elders wente from Gilead to fetch Iephthae out of the londe of Tob, and sayde vnto him: Come, and be oure captayne, and fight agaynst the children of Ammon. But Iephthae sayde vnto the Elders of Gilead: Are not ye they that hate me and have thrust me out of my fathers house, and now come ye to me whan ye are in trouble?

The Elders of Gilead sayde: Therfore come we now againe vnto the, that thou mayest go with vs, and fighte agaynst the children of Ammon, and be oure captayne ouer all that dwell in Gilead. Iephthae sayde monto the Elders of Gilead: If ye fetch me agayne to fighte agaynst the childre of Ammon, and the LORDE delyuer them before me shal I then be youre heade? The Elders of Gilead saide vnto Iephthae: The LORDE be hearer betwene vs, yf we do not as thou hast sayde. So Iephthae wēte with the Elders of Gilead. And the people made him heade and duke ouer them. And Iephthae spake all this before the LORDE at Mispa.

Then sente Iephthae messaungers to the kynge of the children of Ammon, and caused to saye vato him: What hast thou to do with me, that thou comest vnto me to fight agaynst my londe? The kynge of the childré of Aumō answered Iephthaes messaungers Be cause that Israel toke awaye my londe (whan they departed out of Egipte) from Arnon vnto Iaboek, and vato Iordane: geue it me agayne now therfore peaceably.

But Iephthae sent yet mo messaungers to $\dot{y}$ kynge of the children of Ammon, which sayde vnto him: Thus sayeth Iephthae:* Israel hath taken no londe, nether from the Moabites ner from the children of Ammon: for when they departed out of Egipte, Israel walked thorow the wyldernes vnto the reed see, and came to Cades, and $\dagger$ sent messaungers to the kynge of the Edomites, and sayde: Let me go thorow thy londe. But the kynge of ẙ Edomites wolde not heare thē. They sent lykewyse vnto the kynge of the Moabites, which wolde not also. Thus Israel abode in Cades, and compased the lode of the Edomites and Moabites, and came on the eastsyde of the londe of the Moabites and pitehed

And Israel sent messaungers vnto Sihon the kynge of the Amorites at Heszbon, ${ }^{a}$ and caused to saye vito him: Let me go thorow thy londe vito my place. Neuertheles Sihon wolde not trust Israel to go thorow the border of his londe, but gathered all his people, and pitched at Iahza, and foughte with Israel. Howbeit the LORDE God of Israel gaue Sihon with all his people in to Israels hāde, so that they slewe them. Thus Israel conquered all the londe of the Amorites that dwelt in $\stackrel{ }{y}$ same countre. And they toke possessio of all the borders of the Amorites, from Arnon vito Iabok, a from $\dot{y}$ wyldernesse vnto Iordane. So $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE Gorl of Israel droue awaye the Amorites before his people of Israel, and wilt thou cōquere them? Is it not so, yf thy God Camos gaue the oughte to possesse, woldest thou not possesse it? What so euer the LORDE oure God hath geue vs before vs to possesse, that shal we conquere and take in possession.

Hast thou better right (thinkest thou) the § Balae the some of Ziphor, the kynge of $\stackrel{g}{y}$ Moabites? Dyd he euer go to lawe or fighte agaynst Israel? Though Israel haue dwelt now ypō a thre hūdreth yeare in Hesbon, and in the vyllages therof, in Aroer and in the vyllages therof, and in all the cities that lye by Arnon. Why dyd not ye rescue it at the same tyme? I have not offended the, a thou doest me euell to fighte agaynst me. The LORDE geue sentence this daie betwene Israel and the children of Ammon.

Neuertheles the kynge of the children of Ammon wolde not heare $y$ wordes of Iephthae, which he sent wnto him. Then came y sprete of the LORDE vpon Iephthae, and he wente thorow Gilead and Manasse, and thorow Mispa which lieth in Gilead, and fro Mispa that lieth in Gilead, vnto ${ }^{\circ} \mathrm{y}$ children of Ammon.

And Iephthae vowed a vowe vnto the LORDE, and sayde: \|Yf thou wilt delyuer the childre of Ammon in to my hande, what so euer commeth (first) out at the dore of my house in my waye, whan I returne agayne peaceably from the childre of Ammon, that same shalbe the LORDES, and I wyl offre it for a burntofferynge.

- Deut. 2. d. § Nu. 22. a. Deut. 23. a. || Mar. 6.c.

So Iephthae wente rpon the children of Ammon, to fighte against them. And $\dot{y}$ LORDE gane them in to his hande, and he smote the from Aroer tyll thou comest vnto Minnith, euen twentye cities, and rnto the playne of $\hat{y}$ vynyardes a very greate slaugliter, and thus were the children of Ammon subdued before the children of Israel.

Now whan Iephthae came to Mispa vnto his house, beholde, his doughter wente out to mete him with tabrettes and daunces: and she was his onely childe, a he had els nether sonne ner doughter. And whan he sawe her, he rente his clothes, a sayde: Alas my doughter, thou makest my hert soroufull, and discomfortest me: for I have opened my mouth rnto the LORDE, and can not call it agayne.

She sayde: My father, yf thou hast opened thy mouth into the LORDE, then do vnto me as it is proceaded out of thy mouth, acordinge as the LORDE hath aueged the of thyne enemies the children of Ammon. And she sayde vinto hir father: Do this for me, geue me leue to go downe vpo the mountaynes two monethes, that I maye bewepe my virginite with my playfeeres. He sayde: Go thy waye. And he let her go two monethes. Then wente she with her playefeeres, and bewayled hir mayden heade ypon the mountaynes. And after two monethes she came agayne vnto hir father. And he dyd unto her acordinge as he had vowed. And she had neuer bene in daunger of eny man. And it was a custome in Israel, that the doughters of Israel shulde go enery yeare, and mourne for the doughter of Iephthae the Gileadite, foure dayes in the yeare.

SAMSON wente downe mito Thimnath, $\mathfrak{A}$ t there he sawe a woman amoge the doughters of $\dot{y}$ Philistynes. And whan he came vp, he tolde his father t his mother, a sayde: I hane sene a woman amōge the doughters of the Philistynes, I praye you geue me the same to wife. His father $\tau$ his mother sayde unto him: Is there not a woman anonge the doughters of thy brethren, tin all thy people, but thou must go t take a wife amoge the Philistynes, which are vncireumcised?

Samson sayde rnto his father: Creue me this womā, for she pleaseth myne eyes. But his father $\pi$ his mother knewe not ${ }^{t}$ y it came of the LORDE, ot that he soughte an occasion agaynst the Philistynes. For the Philistynes reigned ouer Israel at $\stackrel{8}{y}$ same tyme. So Samson wente downe with his father and with his mother vnto Thimnath.

[^257]i And whan they cane to the vynyardes of Thimnath, beholde, there came a yoige roaringe lyon against him. And the sprete of the LORDE came vpon him, and he rente him in peces, euen as a kydd is parted a sunder, and yet had he nothinge at all in his hāde, and he tolde it not vuto his father a his mother.

Now whan he came downe, he spake with the woman, and she pleased Samsons eyes. And after certayne dayes he came agayne, to receaue her, a wente out of $\mathfrak{y}$ waye, that he mighte se $\dot{y}$ deed carcas of the lyon: and beholde, in $\dot{y}$ lyous carcas there was a swarme of beyes, and hony: and he toke of it in his hande, and ate therof by the waye: and wēte vnto his father and to his mother, and gaue them to eate also. But he tolde them not, that he had taken the hony out of the lyons carcas.
And whan his father came downe to the woman, Samson made a feast there, as the yonge men vsed to do. And whan they sawe him, they gaue him thirtie companyons to be with him. Samson sayde vnto them: I wil expresse a darke sentence vnto you, yf ye expounde me the same with in these seuen dayes of the feast, I wyll geue you thirtye shertes, and thirtie chaunge of raymente. ## The re. Chapter.

IT fortuned after certaine daies aboute the wheate haruest tyme, $\dot{y}$ Samson visited his wife with a kydd. And whā he thoughte, I wyl go to my wife in to the chamber, hir father wolde not let him in, and sayde: I thoughte thou wast displeased at her, and 1 gaue her vito thy frende. But she hath a yonger sister which is more beutyfull then she, let y same be thine for her. Thē sayde Sanson vnto thé: I haue once gotte a righte oceasion agaynst the Philistynes, I wyl do you displeasure.

And Samson wēte and catched thre hundreth foxes, and toke fyre brandes, and festened one tayle to another, and put euer a fyre brande betwene two tayles, and kyuled the same with fyre, and let them go amonge the Philistynes corne, and thus he brent $\dot{y}$ stoukes and the stondinge corne, and $\dot{y}$ rynyardes, and the olyue trees.

Then sayde the Philistynes: Who hath done this? And they sayde: Samson the husbande of the Thiminites doughter, because he toke awaye his wife from him, and gaue hir vuto lis frende. Then wente the Philistynes rp , and brent her and hir father also with fyre.

But Samson sayde vnto them: I can suffre you to do this, neuertheles I wyl be auéged ypon you my selfe, and then wyt I leaue of. And he smote them sore both ypo the shulders $\tau$ loyucs: and wēte downe, $\mathbb{\imath}$ dwelt in the stone clyffe at Etan. Then wente the Philistynes vp, and layed sege vuto Iuda, a pitched at Lechi. But they of Iuda sayde: Wherfore are ye come rpagainst vs? They answered: we are come vp to bynde Samson, $\frac{t}{y}$ we maye do vnto him, as he hath done vnto vs.
Then wēte there thre M. men of Iuda downe to the stone clyffe of Etam, a sayde mnto Samson: Knowest thou not that the Philistynes raigne ouer vs? Wherfore hast thou done this then vnto vs? He sayde: As they dyd vnto me, so haue I done vnto the agayne. They sayde vnto him: We are come downe to bynde the, $t$ to delyuer $\dot{y}$ in to the hāde of the Philistynes. Samson sayde vnto thē: Then sweare © promyse me, $\stackrel{\grave{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ ye wyll not slaye me. Neuertheles he brake the roapes in sunder, euẽ as a twryed threde breaketh, whan it hath catched the heate of the fyre. And it was not knowne wherin his strength was.

Then sayde Dalila vnto Samson: beholde, thou hast begyled me a dyssembled with me: tell me yet, wherwithall mayest thou be bounde? He answered her: If they bounde me with new coardes, wherwith no laboure hath bene done, $l$ shulde be feble, $\tau$ as another man. Then toke Dalila new coardes, a bounde him withall, and sayde: 'The Philistynes vpo the Samson (but there was wayte layed for him in the chamber.) And he brake them from his armes, euen as it had bene a threde.

Dalila sayde vnto him: Yet hast thou begyled me a dessembled with me: O tell me yet, wherwithall mightest thou be bounde? He answered her: If thou playtest seue hayrie lockes of my heade together in a fyllet, and fastenest them in with a nayle ( 1 shulde be weake.) And she saide vnto him: The Philistynes spo the Samson. But he awaked out of his slepe, a drue out $\dot{f}$ playted hayrie lockes with the nale and the fyllet.
$\square$ The sayde she vato him: How caist thou saye $\frac{t}{y}$ thou louest me, where as thine hert is not yet with me? Thre tymes hast thou disceatied me, and not tolde me wherin thy greate strength is. So whan she was euery daye importme ypon him with her wordes, it wolde not let him haue rest, his soule was faynte enen unto the death, a he shewed her his whole hert, a sayde moto her: * There eame neuer rasoure rpon my heade, for I am a Nazaree of God fro my mothers wombe. Yf I were shauen, my strength shulde departe fro me, so that I shulde be weake, and as all other men. Now whan Dalila sawe that he had opened all his hert vnto her, she sent a called for the prynces of the Philistynes, a sayde: Come yet once vp, for he hath opened his whole hert vato me. The came the prynces of the Philistynes yp vato her, a broughte the money with them in their handes. And she made him to slepe ypon hir lappe, a called one which shoue of the senē hayrie lockes of his heade. And she beganne to vexe him. The was his strength departed frō him. And she sayde vnto him: The Ihilistynes vpon the Samson. Now whà he awoke out of his slepe, he thoughte: I wil go forth as I hane done afore tyme, $\boldsymbol{r}$ ease my selfe, a knewe not $\dot{\mathrm{t}}$ the LORDE was departed from him. 'They sayde: Arise, let vs go vp vato them, for we haue sene the londe, $\dot{y}$ it is a very good londe: make haist therfore, a be not slacke to go, that ye maye come to take possession of the londe. Whan ye come, ye shall come to a carelesse people, and the londe is wyde : for God hath delynered this place in to youre hande, where nothinge wanteth of all $\frac{t}{y}$ is vpon earth.

Then wente there thence out of the kynreds of Dan from Zarga and Esthaol, sixe hundreth men ready wapened to $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ battayll, and wente $\mathrm{v}_{\mathrm{l}}$, and pitched at Kiriath learim in Juda: therfore called they the same place, y hoost of Dan, unto this daye, which is behinde Kiriath Jearim.

And frō thence they wēte rp mio moñt Ephraim, and came to the house of Micha. Then answered the fyne men that wete out to spye the londe of Lais, $\pi$ sayde mnto their brethren: Knowe ye not that in these houses there is an ouerbody cote, Idols, $\tau$ molten ymages? Now maye ye toke what ye haue to do. They departed thence, and came to the house of the yonge man the Leuite in Michas house, and satuted him fredly. But the sixe hundreth men, which were of $\dot{y}$ children of Dan, stode ready harnessed before $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ gate. And the fyue men that were gone out to spye $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ londe, wete vp, and came thither, and toke the ymage, the onerbody cote, $x$ the molten Idols. In the meane whyle stode $f$ prest at the gate, with the sixe hundreth readye harnessed.

Now whā these were come in to Michas house, and toke the ymage, the onerbody cote, and the molten Idols, the prest sayde vito them: What do ye? They answered him: Holde thy peace, and laye thine hande vpon thy mouth, and go with vs, $\frac{t}{y}$ thou mayest be oure father $\tau$ prest. Is it better for the to be prest in one mans honse, then amonge a whole trybe a kymred in Israel? This pleased the prest well, the toke both the onerbody cote, and the Idols, and the ymage, and came in amonge the people. And whan they turned them and wente thence, they sent their children, and catell, and soch precious thynges as they had, before them.

Whan they were come farre now from the house of Micha, the men $\dot{y}$ were in Michas houses gathered thē together by Miehas house, a folowed $\mathfrak{y}$ chikdre of Dan, and cried vpon the childrē of Dan. They turned their faces aboute, and sayde vnto Micha: What ayleth the, $\frac{t}{y}$ thou makest soch a crienge? He answered: Ye hane taken awaye my goddes, and the prest, $\tau$ are groinge youre waie, and what haue I behynde? What is here? And yet ye saye unto ine: What ayleth the? But the childre of Dan saide vnto him : Let not thy voyce be herle amoge vs, that some wrothfull mè thrust not at the, and so thy soule and the soule of thy house be destroyed. So the chitdre of Dan wete on their waye. And Micha, whan he sawe ${ }^{t}$ they were to stronge for him, turned backe, and came agayne to his house.

But they toke that Micha had made, © the prest whom he had, at came vnto Lais, to a quyete carelesse people, and slewe them with the edge of the swerde, and burnt the cite with fyre, and there was no man to delyuer them: for they laye farre fro Sidon, and had to do with 110 man. And they laye in the valley, which is besyde Beth Rehob. Then buyded they the cite, $\pi$ dwelt therin, * $\tau$ called it Dan, after the name of their father Dan, whom Israel begat. And $\mathfrak{y}$ cite was called Lais afore tyme.

And the children of Dan set vp the ymage for them, and Ionathan $\dot{y}$ sonne of Gerson the sonne of Manasse, $\pi$ his somnes were prestes amoge the trybe of $\hat{y}$ Danites, t vnto the tyme $\frac{t}{y}$ they were led awaye captyue out of the londe. And thus they set amonge the the ymage of Micha, which he had made, as loge as $\dot{y}$ house of God was at Silo.

But on y fourth daye he gat him up early, $x$ wolde go his waye. Then sayde $y$ damsels father vinto his sonne in lawe: $\ddagger$ Refresh thine hert first with a morsell of bred, and then shal ye go. And they sat them downe, ate and dronke both together: Then sayde the damsels father vito the man: Oh tarye all nighte, $\dot{t}^{\mathrm{y}}$ we maie refresh thine hert. But $\hat{y}$ mā arose, © wolde nedes go. And his father in lawe constrayned him to tarye all nighte. On the filth daye in the mornynge he gat him vp, and wolde be gone. Then sayde the damsels father: I praye the comforte thine hert, $\pi$ let vs tary tyll $\dot{y}$ daye be farther past, and so they ate both together.

And the man gat him vp, and wolde go with his coneubyne and with his seruaunt. But his father in lawe the damsels father, saide into him agayne: Lo, the daye is spente, a it begynneth to be euen, tary all night: beholde, here is lodginge yet this daye, abyde here this night, it shal refresh thine hert: tomorow by times get you vp , and go youre waye vuto thy tent. Neuertheles the man wolde not tary, but gat him rp, o wēte his waye, and came ouer agaynst lebus (that is Ierusalem) and his couple of asses ladé, and his coneubyne with him.

Now whan they were come nye vnto Iebus, the daye fell fast awaye. And $\dot{y}$ seruaūt saide vnto his master : I praie you go on, and let vs turne in to this cite of the Iebusites, and targe therim allnight. Notwithstondinge his master sayde vnto him : I wil not turne in to $y$ cite of the aleauntes, that are not of the children of Israel, but I wyl go ouer vinto Gibea. And he sayde vnto his seruaūt: Go thon before, that we maye come to some place, and tarye at Gibea or at Ramah allnight. And they wente on and walked, and the Some wente downe vpon the harde by Gibea, which lyeth in the trybe of Ben lamin: and they turned in there, $\frac{t}{y}$ they mighte come in, and tarye at Gibea all nighte. But whan he came in, he sat him downe in $\frac{g}{y}$ strete of the cite: for there was noman that wolde lodge them in his house that night.

And beholde, then came there an olde ma from his worke out of the felde in the eueninge: and he was also of mount Ephraim, and a straūger at Gibea: but $\mathfrak{y}$ mē of that place were $\dot{y}$ childrē of Iemini. And whan he lifte $\mathrm{y}_{\mathrm{p}}$ his eies, $\pi$ sawe the straunger in the strete he sayde vnto him: Whither wilt thou ga? a whence comest thou? He answered him: We are goinge on oure iourney from Bethleē Iuda, vntyll we come besyde mount Ephrain, whēce I am, and wente vnto Bethleem Iuda, and now I go vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ house of $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE $\preceq$ no mā wil harbarow me. We haue strawe and proueder for oure asses, and bred and wyne for me and thy handmayden, and for the yonge man which is with thy seruaunt, so $\dot{y}$ we wante nothinge.

The olde man sayde: Peace be with the: what soeuer thou wantest, thou findest it with me, onely tarye not in the strete all nighte. And he broughte him in to his house, and gaue the asses prouender: and they washed their fete, and ate $\tau$ dronke. *But the good man of the house wente forth to them, and sayde vito them: Oh no my brethren, do not so wickedly, consideringe this man is come in to my house: Oh do not soch folye. Beholde, I haue a doughter yet a rirgin, and this man hath a coeubine, those wil I brynge forth vnto you, that ye maye humble them, and do with them as ye lyke: but do not soch foly mito this man. Neuertheles the men wolde not herken vnto him. Then toke $\mathfrak{y}$ man his concubine and broughte her forth vito them: and they knewe her, and dealte shamefully with her all $\dot{y}$ night vntill the mornynge. And whan the mornynge brake on, they let her go.
Then came the woman early in the mornynge, and fell downe at the dore of the mais house that her lorde was in, and laye there tyll it was light. Now whan he cane home, he toke a swerde, and helde his concubyne, and cut her with the bones and all in to twolue peces, and sent them in to all the coastes of Isracl. Who so euer sawe it, sayde: Soch a thinge hath not bene done ner sene, sence the tyme that $\dot{y}$ children of Israel departed out of the londe of Egipte, vnto this daye. THEN wente the children of Israel out and gathered a congregacion together as one man, frō Dan vntill Bersaba, and from the londe of Gilead vnto the LORDE to Mispa: and there came together of all the quarters of the people, and of all the trybes of Israel in to the congregacion of the people of God, foure huidreth thousande fote men that drue out $\mathfrak{y}$ swerde. But the children of Ben Iamin herde, how that $\dot{y}$ children of Israel were gone vp vnto Mispa. And the children of Israet sayde: Tell vs, how happened this euell?

Then answered the Leuite the huszbande of the woman that was slayne, and sayde: I came to Gibea in Ben Iamin with my concubyne, to tary there allnight, then the eytesins of Gibea gat them vp agaynst me, and compased me aboute in the house by night, and thoughte to slaye me, and defyled my cōeubyne, so that she dyed : then toke I my cōeubyne, and cut her in peces, and sent the peces in to euery countre of the inheritaunce of Israel: for they haue done an abhominacion and folye in Israel. Behotle, here are ye children of Israel: aduyse you well, and take this matter in hande.

So atl the people gat them vp as one mā, and sayde : Nomā shal go in to his tente, ner departe to his house, but this wil we do now agaynst Gibea : Let vs cast lot, and take ten men of an hundreth, and an hundreth of a thousande, and a thousande of ten thousande, out of all $\dot{y}$ trybes of Israel, $\dot{y}$ they maie take fode for y y people, to come a do with Gibea Ben Iamin, acordynge to their folye which they haue done in Israel. Thus all the men of Israel beynge confederate, gathered them selues together as one man wito the cite: and the trybes of Israel sent men vito all the kinreds of Ben lamin, and caused to saye vnto them: What maner of wiekydnes is this, that is done amonge you? Delyuer here therfore the men the chiddren of Belial at Gibea, that we maye put them to death, and do awaye the euell out of Israel. Neuertheles the children of Ben Jamin wolde not folowe the voyce of their brethren the children of Israel, but gathered them selues out of $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{}$ cities vito Gibea, to go forth in battayll agaynst the ehildren of Israel.

And the same daye were there nombred of the children of Ben lamin out of the cities, sixe and twentye thousande men, that drue the swerde, beside the eitesyns of Gibea of whom there were tolde sene hundreth chosen men. And amoge all this people there were chosen out senen hundreth men, which vsed not the right hande but the lefte, and yet with the slynge coulde they tonch an heer, and not mysse. But the men of Israel, beside them of Be Iamin, were nōbred foure hudreth thousande, which drue the swerde, a were all men of armes. And the children of Israel arose, and wente up to the house of God (in Silo) and axed at God, and sayde: Who shall go vp for vs to beginne the battayll with 8 children of Ben lamin? The LORDE saide: Iuda shall begyme.

So the children of lsrael gat the xp in $\hat{y}$ mornige, a pitched oner agaist Gibea, a enery man of lsrael wēte out to fighte with Ben lamin, and set them selues in araye to fighte agaynst Gibea. Then fell the children of Ben lamin out of Gibea, and slewe the same dave amonge Israel two tr twentye thousande to the grounde.

But the people of the men of Israel comforted them selues, and made them ready to fighte yet more in the same pace, after they had prepared them selues the daye afore. Ami the children of Israel wente vp, and wapte before the LORDE mityll the enenynge, and axed at the LORDE, $\pi$ sayde: Shad we gio eny more to lighte with oure brethren the chitdren of Ben lamin? The LORDE sayde: (io vp vato them. And whan the children of Jrael gat them up to the childre of Ben lamin on y mext daye, the Ben lamites fell ont of (iibea agaynst them the same daye, and slewe yet eightene thousande of ${ }^{\circ}$ children of Israel to the grounde, which all drue the swerde.
'Then wente all the children of Israel vp, and all the people, and came to the house of God, and wepte, and taried there before the LORDE, a fasted that daye vntyll the euen, and offred burntofferynges and deedofferinges before the LORDE. And the children of Israel axed at the LORDE (the Arke of the couenaunt of God was there at that tyme, and Phineas the sonue of Eleasar the sonne of Aaron stode before him at the same tyme) a they sayde: Shal we go forth eny more to fighte with oure brethren the childre of Ben lamin, or shal we leaue of? ' The LORDE sayde: Go vp, tomorow wyll I delyuer them in to youre handes.

And the children of Israel set a preuy wateh agaynst Gibea rounde aboute, and so the children of Israel wente up to the children of Ben lamin on the thirde daye, and set them selues in araye agaynst Gibea like as the other two tymes afore. "The eame the children of Ben lamin out agaynst the people, a brake out of the cite, a beganne to slaye certayne romuded of the people (like as the other two times afore) in the felde vpon two stretes: wherof one goeth towarde Bethel, the other vnto Gilead spon a thirtye men in Israel. Then thonght the childre of Ben lamin: 'They are smytten before vs like as afore. But the childre of Israel sayde: Let vs flye, that we maie pronoke them out of the cite in to the hye stretes.

Then all the men of lsrael gat them vp from their place, and prepared them selues vito Baal Thamar. And the hinder wateh of Israel brake out of their place, from y eaue of Gaba, and came rnto Gibea, twentye thousande chosen men out of all Israel, so that it was a sore battayll: but they knewe not that the euell shulde happen voto them. Thus the LORDE smote Ben Iamin before the children of Israel, so that the same daye the children of Isael destroyed fyue a twentye thousaude and an hundreth men in Ben Iamin, which all drue the swerde.

For whan the childrē of Ben lamin sawe that they were smitten, the men of 1srael gaue them rowme (to flye). For they trusted to the watch, which they had sett by Gibea. And the watch made haist also, a brake forth vnto Gibea, and wente vpon it, and smote all the cite with the edge of $\dot{y}$ swerde. They were appoynted betwene them selues the men of Israel and the hynder watch, to fall vpon them with the swerde, whan the smoke of the cite arose. Now whan the men of Israel turned them in the battayll, and Ben Iamin beganne to smyte the wounded in Israel ypon a thirtie men, and thoughte, they are smytten before vs, like as in the battayll afore, then beganne there a piler of smoke to arise vp from the cite. And Ben Iamin loked behinde them: and bcholde, the flamme of $\frac{y}{y}$ cite wente vp vnto heauen. And the men of Israel turned them, and were fearce vpon ${ }^{\mathrm{y}} \mathrm{y}$ men of Ben Iamin: for they sawe that the euell wolde happen vnto them.

And they turned them before the men of Israel in the waye to the wyldernesse, but the battayll folowed rpon them. And them of the cite destroyed they amoge them. And they compased Ben Iamin rounde aboute, and folowed vpon them vnto Menuah, and trode them downe tyll afore Gibea eastwarde. And there fell of Ben Iamin eightene thousande men, which were all men of armes.

Whan the remnaunt of Ben Iamin sawe that, they turned them and fled towarde the wildernesse vnto the stonye rocke of Rimon. But in the same strete they slewe fyue thousande men, and folowed vpon them vnto Gideom, and slewe two thousande of thè: and so there fell the same daye of Ben lamin fyue and twenty thousande men which drue $\mathrm{y}^{\circ}$ swerde, and were all mē of armes. Onely sixe hundreth men turned backe, and fled towarde the wyldernesse vuto the stonye rocke of Rimon, and abode in the rocke of Rimon foure monethes. And the men of Israel came agayne to the children of Ben lamin, and smote them that were in the cite with $\dot{y}$ edge of the swerde, both mē and catell and all that was founde: and what soeuer was foude in the cite, they cast it in to the fyre.

 HE men of Israel had sworē at Mispa, and sayde: Noman shal gene his doughter to the Ben Iamites to wife. And the people came to the house of God (in Silo) a abode there before God vntill the enenynge, and lifte vp their voyce, and wepte sore, and sayde:* Num. 31. c.

O LORDE God of Israel, wherfore is this come to passe in Israel this daye? But on the morow the people gat the up early, and builded there an altare, and offred burntofferinges and deedofferynges.

And the children of Israel sayde: Where is there eny mā of the trybes of Israel, that is not come vp with the congregacion vnto the LORDE? For there was a greate ooth made, that who so came not vp to Mispa mito the LORDE, shulde dye the deeth. And the children of Israel were sory for Ben lamin their brother, and sayde: This daye is there one trybe lesse in Israel. How wyll we do that the remnaunt maye haue wyues? For we haue sworne by the LORDE, that we wyl not geue the wyues of oure doughters. And they saide: Where is there eny ma of the trybes of Israel, that is not come vp to the LORDE vnto Mispa? And beholde, there was not one man of the citesyns of labes in Gilead.

Then sent the congregacion twolue thousande men of armes thither, and commaunded them, and sayde: Go youre waye, and smite the citesyns of Iabes in Gilead with the swerde, the wemen also and the children, but so that ye do after this maner: *Se that ye damne all them that are males, and all the wemen that haue lyen with men. And amonge the citesins of labes in Gilead they foude foure hundreth damsels, which were virgins, and had Iyen with noman: those they broughte in to the hoost vnto Silo, which lyeth in the londe of Canaan.

Then sent the whole congregacion, ${ }^{a}$ and caused to talke with the children of Ben Iamin, which were in the stonie rocke of Rimo and called unto them lrendly. So the children of Ben Iamin came agayne at the same tyme, and they gaue them wemen which they had of the wemen of Labes in Gilead, and founde no mo after that maner. Then were the people sory for Ben Iamin, that y LORDE had made a gappe in the trybes of Israel. And the Elders of the congregacio sayde: What wil we do, that the remnaunt maye haue wyues also? for the weme in Ben lamin are destroied, and they sayde: The enheritaunce of them of Ben Iamin that are escaped, must nedes remayne, that there be not a trybe destroyed out of Israel: a we can not geue them oure [^260]doughters to wines. For the children of Israel haue sworne and sayde: Cursed be he that geneth a wyfe to the Ben Iamites.

And they sayde: Beholde there is a yearly feast of the LORDE at Silo, which lieth on the northsyde of the Gods house, and on the eastside of the strete as a mā goeth from Bethel mnto Sichem, and lieth on the south side of Libona. And they commaunded the children of Ben Iamin, « sayde: Go youre waye, and wayte in the vynyardes. And whan ye se that the doughters of Silo go forth by eopanyes to daunse, get you out of the vynyardes, and enery man take him a wyfe of the doughters of Silo, and go youre waye in to the lōde of Ben Iamin. As for their fathers and brethren, whan they come to lawe with vs, we wyll saye suto them: Be fauourable to them, for they haue not taken the in battaill: but ye gaue the not vnto them by time, and it is youre faute.

The children of Ben lamin did so, and acordinge to their nombre toke them wyues from the daunse, whom they caught by violence, and wente their waye, a dwelt in their awne inheritaunce, and buylded cities and dwelt therin. The children of Israel also gat them vp from thence at the same time, euery one to his trybe and to his kinred, and departed thēce, euery man to his awne inheritaunce. * At $\stackrel{t}{y}$ time was there no kynge in Israel, and euery man dyd ${ }^{\circ}$ thinge $\frac{\dot{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ was right in his awne eies.

aTN y tyme whan the Iudges ruled, there was a derth in the londe. And there wente a mā from Bethleē Iuda to take his iounney in to the londe of the Moabites with his wife and two sonnes, which man was called Eli Melech, and his wife Naemi, this two somes, the one Mahelon, and the other Chilion: these were Ephrates of Bethleen luda. And whan they cane in to the londe lof $\underset{y}{\circ}$ Moabites, they dwelt there. And Eli Nelech Naemis huszbande dyed, a she was left behinde with hir two sonnes, which toke Moabitish wyues: the one was called Arpa, the other Ruth. And whan they had dwelt there ten yeare, they dyed both, Mahelon and Chilion, so that the woman remayned desolate of both hir sonnes and hir huszbande.

Then gat she her vp with both hir sonnes wyues, $\pi$ wente agayne out of the lōde of $\mathfrak{y}$ Moabites (for she had herde in the londe of
${ }^{3}$ |the Moabites, $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ the LORDE had visited his people a geuen them bred) a so she departed from $\dot{y}$ place where she was, both hir sonnes wyues with her. And as they wète by the waye to come agayne in to the londe of Iuda, she sayde vnto both hir somnes wyues: Go youre waye, $\tau$ turne backe ether of you to hir mothers house: the LORDE shewe mercy vpon you, as ye haue done on the $\frac{t}{y}$ are deed a on me. The LORDE graunte you, $\frac{t}{y}$ ye maie fynde rest ether of you in hir huszbindes house (whom ye shal get) and she kyssed them.

Then lift they vp their voyce, and wepte, a sayde vito her: We wil go with the vnto thy people. But Naemi sayde: Turne agayne my doughters, why wolde ye go with me? How can I haue children eny more in my body, to be youre huszbandes? Turne agayne my doughters, and go youre waye, for I am now to olde to take an huszbande.

And though I shulde saye: I hope this night to take an huszbande a to brynge forth children, yet coulde ye not tary till they were growne vp: for ye shulde be to olde, so that ye coulde haue no huszbandes. No my doughters, therfore am I sory for you, for $\hat{y}$ hade of the LORDE is gone forth ouer me.

Then lifte they tp their voyce, and wepte yet more, and Arpa kyssed hir mother in lawe (and turned backe againe) but Ruth abode styll by her. Neuertheles she sayde: Beholde, thy syster in lawe is turned backe vito hir people and to hir god, turne thou againe also after thy sister in lawe. Ruth answered : Speake not to me therof, that I shulde forsake the, and turne backe from the: whither so euer thou goest, thither wil I go also: and loke where thou abydest, there wil I abide also: Thy people is my people, a thy God is my God. Loke where thou diest, there wil I dye, and euen there wil I also be buried. The LORDE do this and that vito me, death onely shal departe vs.

Now whan she sawe, that she was stedfastly mynded to go with her, she spake nomore to her therof. So they wente on both together, till they came vnto Bethleem. And whan they were come in to Bethleem, the whole cite was moned oner them, and sayde: Is not this Naemi? Neuerthelesse she sayde vnto them: call me not Naemi, but Mara: for the Allmightie hath made me very sory. I departed full, but the LORDE hath brought me home agayne emptye. Why call ye me then Naemi? whā the LORDE hath broughte me lowe, and the Allmightie hath made me sory?

It was aboute the tyme of the begynninge of the barlye haruest, whan Naemi and hir sonnes wife Ruth y Moabitysse, came agayne from the londe of the Moabites vnto Bethleem. There was a kinsman also of $\dot{y}$ kynred of Eli Melech Naemis huszbande, whose name was Boos, which was an honest man.

Thou shalt not come vpon another mans londe to gather, and go not awaye from hence, but tary with my disels, and loke where they reape in $y$ felde, go thou after them: for I hane comaunded iny seruauntes that no man touch the. And yf thon be a thyrst, go thy waye to the vessell $x$ drynke, where my seruauntes drawe. Then fell she downe vpon hir face, and bowed hir self downe to the earth, and sayde vnto him: How haue I founde this fanoure in thy sighte, that thou woldest knowe me, which am yet a straunger?

Boos answered and sayde vnto her: It is tolde me alltogether, what thou hast done unto thy mother in lawe after tly huszbādes death, how that thou hast left thy father and thy mother, and thy natiue countre, and art come to a people, whom thou hast not knowne afore. The LORDE recompence the thy doinge, and thy rewarde be parfecte with the LORDE God of Israel, mnto whom thon art come to put thy trust rader his wynges. She sayde: let me fynde fauoure (syr) before thyne eyes, for thou hast comforted me, and spoken frendly vito thy handmayde, where as I am not yet like one of thy handmaydēs.

Boos sayde mnto her: Whan it is eatinge tyme, come hither, and eate of the bred, and dyppe thy morsell in the vyneger. And she sat hir downe besyde the reapers. And he set parched corne before her, and she ate, a was 3 satisfyed, and lefte ouer. And wha she rose to gather, Boos commaunded his seruauntes, and sayde: Let her gather betwene the sheues also, and do her no dishonestye: and cast of the sheues unto her, and let it lye that she maye gather it $\mathrm{y} p$, and se that noman reproue her for it.

So she gathered in the felde vntyll euen and she shaked out what she had gathered, and it was allmost an Epha of barlye: and she toke it rp, and came in to the cite, and shewed hir mother in lawe what she had gathered. She toke forth also, and gaue her of that which was left, wherof she was satysfyed. Thè sayde hir mother in lawe mito her: Blessinge baue the man that hath knowne the, where thou hast gathered andlaboured this daye.

She tolde hir mother in lawe by whom she had laboured, and sayde: The mans name, by whom 1 haue wroughte to daye, is Boos. Naemi sayde unto hir doughter in lawe: The blessynge of the LORDE haue he, for he hath not lefte of to be mercifull vnto the lyuynge * and to the deed. And Naemi sayde vnto her: The same man belongeth rnto vs, and is oure nye kynsman. Ruth the Moabitisse saide: He saide morouer vnto me: Thou shalt resorte vito my seruauntes, tyll they haue made an ende of all my haruest. Naemi sayde mnto Ruth hir doughter in lawe: It is better my doughter, that thou go forth with his damsels, lest eny man withstōde the in another felde. Thus she kepte herselfe with Boos damsels, so that she gathered vntill the barlye haruest and the wheate haruest was out, and came againe to hir mother in lawe.

AND Naemi hir mother in lawe sayde vnto her: My doughter, I wyll prouyde rest for the, that thou maiest prospere. Boos oure kynsman, by whose damsels thou hast bene, casteth vp barlye now this night in his barne. Bathe thyselfe therfore, and tmoffell the, and put on thy clothes, and go downe vnto the barne, so $\frac{t}{y}$ noma knowe the, tyll they haue all eaten and dronken.

Whan he layeth him downe then to sleape, mark $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ place where he lyeth downe, and come thou, and take vp the couerynge at his fete, and laye the downe, so shall he tell the what thou shalt do. She sayde vnto her: what so euer thou saiest vnto me, I wil do it.

She wente downe to the barne, a dyd all as hir mother in lawe had comaunded her. And whā Boos had eatē a dronkē, his hert was mery, a he came and layed him downe behynde a heape of sheues. And she came secretly, and toke sp the coueringe at his fete, and layed hir downe. Now whā it was midnight, the man was afrayed, and groped aboute him, and beholde, a woman laye at his fete. And he sayde: Who art thou? She answered: I am Ruth thy handmayden, sprede thy wynges ouer thy hadmayden: for thou art the nexte kynsman.

He sayde: The LORDES blessinge haue thou my doughter. Thou hast done a better mercy here after then before, $\frac{t}{y}$ thou art not gone after yonge men, nether riche ner poore. Feare not now my doughter: All $\dot{y}$ thou hast sayde, will I do for the: for all the cite of my people knoweth, $\frac{t}{y}$ thou art a vertuous womā̀. Trueth it is now, $\frac{t}{y} \mathrm{I}$ am a nye kynsmā, but there is one nyer then I. Tarye thou allnighte. Tomorow yf he take the, well: yf he like not to take $\frac{\circ}{y}$, then wil I take $\dot{8}_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{g}} \mathrm{my}$ selfe, as truly as $\dot{y}$ LORDE lyueth. Slepe thou tyll $y^{f}$ mornynge. And she slepte at his fete vntyll $\dot{y}$ morow. And she rose up or euer one coulde knowe another. And he thoughte thus: That no mā knowe now $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ there hath come a woman in to the barne, and he sayde: Reach me the cloke $\stackrel{t}{y}$ thou hast on the, a holde it forth. And she helde it forth. And he meet her sixe measures of barlye, and layed it upon her, $x$ she wente in to the cite, (T) came to hir mother in lawe, which sayde:

How is it with the my doughter? And she tolde her all ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ the mā had done vnto her, a sayde: These sixe measures of barlye gaue he me, for he sayde: Thou shalt not come emptye vnto thy mother in lawe. She sayde: Abyde my doughter, tyll thou se what ${ }^{\circ}$ matter wil growe to: for the man wilt not ceasse, tyll he brynge it to an ende this daye.

${ }^{9}$ BOOS wente vp to $\mathfrak{y}$ gate, and sat him downe there: a beholde, whan $y$ nye kynsman wente by, Boos spake vnto him, a sayde: Come a syt the downe here (and called him by his name.) And he came a sat him downe, a he toke ten men of the Elders of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ cite, a sayde: Syt you downe here. And they sat the downe. The sayde he to the nye kynszman : Naemi which is come againe frō the lode of the Moabites * offreth to sell $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ pece of londe, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ was oure brothers Eli Melech, therfore thoughte I to shewe it before thine eares, a to tell the: Yf thou wilt redeme it, then bye it before the citesyns $\mathbb{a}$ before the Elders of my people: but yf thou wylt not redeme it, then tell me, $\frac{1}{}$ I maie knowe: for there is no nye kynsmã̃ excepte thou, and I nexte after the.

He sayde: I wil redeme it. Boos saide : In the daye $\mathrm{t}_{\mathrm{y}}$ thou byest the lode out of y hande of Naemi, thou must take Ruth also the Moabitisse the wife of the deed, that thou mayest rayse vp a name to $\mathfrak{y}$ deed in his inheritaunce. The sayde he: I can not redeme it, lest I happlye destroye myne awne enheritaunce. Redeme thou $\frac{t}{y}$ I shulde redeme, for I can not redeme it. But this was an olde custome in Israel concernynge the redemynge $₫$ chaūginge, $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathbf{y}}$ all matters mighte be stable, the one put of his shue, a gaue it vnto $\hat{y}$ other: $\dot{y}$ was the testimony in Israel.

And the nye kynsman sayde vnto Boos: Bye thou it, $\pi$ he put of his shue. And Boos sayde rnto the Elders and to all the people: Ye are witnesses this daie, $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}} \mathrm{I}$ haue boughte out of the hande of Naemi, all that belonged to Eli Melech, and all that was Chilions and Mahelons: And Ruth the Moabitisse Mahelons wife, take I to wife, that I maye rayse vp a name vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ deed in his inheritaunce, and that his name be not roted out from amonge his brethren, and out of the gate of his place: Of this are ye witnesses. And all the people that was in the gate with the Elders, saide: We are witnesses. The LORDE make the woman that commeth in to thy house, as Rachel and Lea ( $\ddagger$ which both have buylded vp the house of Israel) that she maye be an ensample of vertue in Ephrata, and haue an honorable name in Bethleem. And thy house be as $\dot{y}$ house of Phares ( $\$$ whō Thamar bare vnto Iuda) thorow the sede, that the LORDE shall geue the of this damsell.

So Boos toke Ruth, and she became his wife. And whan he laye with her, the LORDE graunted her $\frac{t}{y}$ she conceaued, and bare a sonne. The sayde the wemen vnto Naemi: Praysed be the LORDE, which hath not suffred a kynsman to ceasse from the at this tyme, that his name maye contynue in Israel : he shal restore thy life agayne, and prouyde for thine age. For thy sonnes wife which hath loued the, hath borne him that is better anto the, then seuen sonnes.

And Naemi toke the childe, and layde it vpon hir lappe, and became the norse of it, and hir neghbours gaue him a name a sayde: There is a childe borne unto Naemi, and they called his name Obed. The same is the father of Isai, which is $\dot{y}$ father of Dauid.

The first Chapter.

${ }^{3}$ THERE was a man of Ramatham Sophim of mount Ephraim, * whose name was Elcana $\dot{y}$ sonne of Ieroham, $\dot{y}$ sonne of Elihu, $\dot{y}$ sonne of Tohu, $\dot{y}$ sonne of $Z u p h,{ }^{t} y$ was an Ephrate. And he had two wyues, $y$ one was called Anna, y other Penimna. As for Penimna, she had children, but Amna had no childrē. And y same man wēte vp frō his cite tat his tyme, to worshippe and to offer vnto the LORDE Zebaoth at Silo. There were the prestes of the LORDE Ophni and Phineas, the two sonnes of Eli. Now whan it came rpon a daye that Elcana offred, he gaue partes vnto his wife Peninna, and to all his somes and doughters. But vnto Anna he gaue one deale heuely, for he loued Anna. Neuertheles $\ddagger$ the LORDE had closed hir wombe, th hir aduersary cast her in the tethe with hir mfrutefulnes, because the LORDE had closed hir wombe: thus dyd she euery yeare, whan they wente vp to the house of the LORDE, and thus she prouoked her. So she wepte, and ate nothinge. But Elcana hir huszbande sayde moto her: Wherfore wepest thou? and why eatest thou not? And wherfore is thine hert so greued? Am not I better vato the then ten sonnes?

Then stode Amna vp, whan she had eaten and dronken at Silo. But Eli the prest sat ypon a stole by the poste of the temple of the LORDE. And she was full of heuynes in hir herte, anct prayed mnto the LORDE, and wepte, and vowed a rowe, and sayde: O LORDE Zebaoth, yf thou wilt loke vpon the aduersite of thy handmayden, and thynke vpon me, and not forget thy handmayden, and wilt [^262][^263]geue thy handmayden a sonne, I wil geue him vinto the LORDE all his life longe, * and there shal no rasoure come vpon his heade.

And whà she had prayed longe before $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE, Eli toke hede to hir mouth, for Anna spake in hir hert, hir lippes onely moued, but hir voyee was not herde. Then thoughte Eli she had bene dronken, and sayde vnto her: How longe wilt thou be dronken? Let come from the the wyne that thou hast by the. Neuertheles Anna answered and sayde: No my lorde, I am a soroufull woman, wyne and stronge drynke haue I not dronken tbut haue poured out my hert before ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE. Counte not thy handmayden a doughter of Belial : for out of my heuy thoughte and sorow haue I spoken hitherto.

Eli answered her, and sayde: Go thy waye in peace, the God of Israel shal graunte $\dot{y}$ thy peticion that thou hast desyred of him. She sayde: Let thy handmayden fynde fauoure in thy sighte. So the woman wente hir waye and ate, and loked nomore so soroufully: and on $\dot{f}$ morow they gat them vp by tymes. And whan they had worshipped before $\dot{f}$ LORDE, they returned, and came home vnto Ramatha.

And Eleana laye with Anna his wife, and the LORDE remembred her. And after certayne dayes, she cōceaued and bare a sonne, and called his name Samuel, for I haue desyred him (sayde she) of the LORDE. And whan the man Eleana wente vp with all his houszholde to offre sacrifice and his vowe unto the LORDE at soch tyme as $\dot{y}$ custome was, Amna wente not vp, but sayde vnto hir huszbande: (I wil not go vp) tyll y childe be weened : then will I brynge him, that he maye appeare before the LORDE, and cotynue there $\ddagger$ for euer.

Eleana hir huszbande sayde vnto her: The do as thou thynkest best, tary tyll thou haue weened him: but the LORDE perfourme that he hath spoken. So the woman abode, and gaue hir sonne sucke, tyll she weened him. And whan she had weened him, she broughte hin vp with her, with thre bullockes, with an Ephi of fyne floure, and a bottell of wyne, and broughte him in to $\dot{y}$ house of the LORDE at Silo.

Neuertheles the childe was yet but yonge.

[^264]And they slewe a bullocke, and broughte the childe vito Eli. And she sayde: O my lorde, as truly as thy soule lyueth my lorde, I am the woman that stode here by $\dot{\mathrm{j}}$, and made intercession vnto the LORDE, whan I prayed for this childe. Now hath y LORDE graunted me my peticion, which I desyred of him, therfore have I geuen him ouer vito the LORDE, as longe as he is lent vinto the LORDE. And they worshipped ${ }^{f}$ LORDE there.

AND Anna prayed, and sayde: My hert reioyseth in the LORDE, a my horne is exalted in the LORDE.

My mouth is opened wyde vpō myne enemies, for I am glad of thy saluacion.

There is no man holy as the LORDE, for without the is nothinge, and there is no cōforte like vnto oure God.

Let go youre greate boostinge of hye thynges, let go out of youre mouth that olde byworde: for the LORDE is a God $\frac{ \pm}{y}$ knoweth all thinges, $\tau$ he hath set all workes in order.

house. And the childe became the LORDES mynister before Eli the prest. But Elis sonnes were the childrē of Belial, and knewe not the LORDE, ner the dutye of the prestes vnto the people: but whan eny man wolde offre oughte, the prestes boye came, whyle the flesh was seethinge, and had a thre forked fleshoke in his hande, and thrust it in to the cauldron, or ketell, or panne, or pot: and loke what he drue forth with the fleshoke, that toke the prest therof. Thus dyd they vnto all Israel, which came thither vnto Silo.

Like wyse, or euer they burned the fatt, the prestes lad came, and sayde vito him that broughte the offerynge: Geue me the flesh, that I maye roste it for the prest, for he wyl receaue no sodden flesh of $\dot{y}$, but rawe. If eny man sayde then vnto him: Let the fat burne as it oughte to do this daye, and afterwarde take what thine hert desyreth, then sayde he vnto him: Thou shalt geue it me cuen now: yf no, I wyll take it from the by violece. Therfore was the syme of $\dot{y}$ childrè very greate before the LORDE, for y people spake euell of $\mathfrak{y}$ meatofferynge of ${ }^{\circ}$ LORDE. But Samuel was a mynister before the LORDE, and the childe was gyrded with an ouer body cote of lynnen. His mother also made him a litle cote of sylke, and broughte it vp vnto him at eouenient tymes, whä she wente vp with hir huszbande to offer y offerynge in due season.

And Eli blessed Eleana a his wife, and sayde: The LORDE geue the sede of this woman, for this good that thou hast lent vito the LORDE. And they wēte vnto their place. And the LORDE vysited Anna, so that she coceaued and bare thre sonnes and two doughters: but the childe Samuel grewe vp with the LORDE.
As for Eli, he was very olde, and herde of all that his sonnes dyd vnto all Israel, and how they laye with the wemen that serued God before the dore of the tabernacle of witnesse, and he sayde vito them: wherfore do ye this? For I heare of youre euell conuersacion of all this people. Not so my childre, this is no good reporte that I heare, ye canse the people of the LORDE to offende. *If eny mā synne agaynst a man, the iudge cā redresse it. they herkened not unto the voyce of their father, for the LORDES wyll was to slaye them. But the childe Samuel wente and grewe vp, $\mathfrak{a}$ was accepted of the LORDE a of mè.

There came a man of God to Eli, and sayde vnto him: Thus sayeth the LORDE: 1 slrewed my selfe vnto thy fathers house, whan they were yet in Egipte vuder y house of Pharao, and chose him there unto my selfe before all the trybes of Israel, for the presthode, that he shulde offer vpon myne altare, and burne incense, and weere the ouerbody cote before me, tand vato thy fathers honse I gaue all the offeringes of the children of lsrael. Why layest thou thy selfe then agaynst my sacrifices and meatofferinges, which I commaunded (to offer) in the habitacion: and thou honourest thy somnes more then me, that ye mighte fede youre selues with the firstlinges of all the meatofferynges of my people of Israel?

Therfore sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: I haue spoken, that thy honse and thy fathers house shulde walke before me for euer. But now sayeth the LORDE: That be farre fro me. But who so etter honoureth me, him wil 1 honoure also: as for those $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ despyse me, they shal not be regarded. Beholde, the tyme shal come, that I wyll breake thyne arme in two, and the arme of thy fathers house, so that there shal no oldeman be in thy house. And thon shalt se thine aduersaries in the habitacion, in all the good of Israel, and there shal neuer be ofde man in thy fathers house. Yet wyll I not rote out euery man of the fro myne altare, but $\frac{t}{y}$ thyne eyes maye be consumed, ঞ that thy soule maye be sory: ic a greate multitude of thy house shal dye, whan they are come to be men.

And this shalbe a token vnto the, that shal come ypon thy two somes Ophui and Phineas: ${ }^{a}$ They shall both dye in one daye. #But vnto my selfe I wyll rayse up a faithfull prest, which shal do acordinge as it is in my hert a in my soule: wito him wyll I buylde a sure house, that he maye allwaye walke before myne anoynted. And who so euer remayneth of thy house, shall come and worshipe him for a syluer peny and for a pece of bred, and shall saye: I praye the leate me to one prestes parte, that I maye eate a morsell of bred.

AND all Israel spake of Samuel. And Israel wente forth to the battayll against the Philistynes, a pitched besyde the $\ddagger$ Helpe stone: As for the Philistynes, they pitched at Aphek, and prepared them selues agaynst Israel. And whan the battayll beganne, the hoost was deuyded, so that Israel was smytte before the enemies, $\mathbb{\pi}$ in the edge in the felde they slewe aboute a foure thousande men. And whan the people came in to the hoost, the Elders of Israel sayde: Wherfore hath the LORDE caused is to be smytten this daie before the Philistynes? Let vs take vnto vs the Arke of the LORDES conenaunt from Silo, a let it come amōge vs, that it maye helpe vs from the hande of oure enemies. And the people sent minto Silo, a caused to fet théce the Arke of $\hat{y}$ conenaunt of the LORDE Zebaoth, that sytteth vpon the Cherubins. And with the Arke of the couenaunt of God there were the two somes of Eli, Ophni and Phineas.

And whan the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE came in to the hoost, all Israel shouted with a greate shoute, so that the earth sounded withall. But whan the Philistynes herde $\stackrel{f}{y}$ norse of $\dot{y}$ shoute, they sayde: what noyse is this of soch greate shontinge in the tentes of the Hebrues? And whan they per-ceaned $\dot{y}$ the Arke of the LORDE was come in to the hoost, they were afrayed $\pi$ sayde: God is come in to the hoost. And they sayde morouer: Wo vato vs, for it hath not bene thus afore tyme. Wo vnto vs. Who wil delyuer vs frō the hande of these hye goddes? These are the goddes that smote Egipte with all maner of plages in the wyldernesse. Be stronge now and manly ye Philistynes, that ye serue not the Hebrues *as they haue serued you. Be manly and fighte.

Then foughte the Philistynes, a Israel was smytten, © euery one fled vnto his tete, © there was a very greate slaughter, so that there fell of Israel thirtye thousande fotemé, © the Arke of God was take, + t the two sounes of Eli, Ophni and Phineas dyed.
Then rāne there one of Ben Iamin out of the fore fronte of the battayl, a came unto Silo the same daye, a had his clothes rente, and had earth vpō his heade. And whan he came in, Heli sat vpon the seate, that he mighte loke towarde the waye: for his herte was fearfull aboute $\dot{y}$ Arke of God. And whan the man came in to the cite, he tolde it forth: and all the cite cried. And whan Eli herde $y$ noyse of the cryege, he axed: What noyse of busynes is this? The man came haistely, and tolde Eli. (As for Eli, he was fourescore and eightene yeare olde, $\ddagger$ and his eyes were dymme, so that he coulde not se.) The man sayde vnto Eli: I come and am fled this daye out of the hoost. He sayde: How is it my sonne?
Then answered the tydinge bringer, © sayde: Israel is fled before the Philistynes, and a greate slaughter hath there bene amonge the people, ז thy two sonnes Ophni it Phineas are deed, yee a the Arke of God is take awaye. Whan he had made mencion of the Arke of God, he fell downe bacwarde from the seate by the gate, and brake his neck, and dyed: for he was olde, $\mathbb{t}$ an heuy man. He iudged Israel fortie yeares. The wife of his sonne Phineas was with childe, a shulde shortly be delyuered, whan she herde the tydinges ${ }^{\frac{1}{y}}$ the Arke of God was taken, and ${ }^{\stackrel{t}{y}}$ hir brother in lawe and hir huszbīde were deed, she bowed hir selfe and trauayled: for hir payne came vpon her. And whan she was now at the poynte of death, the wemen that stode by her, sayde: Feare not, thou hast a yoge some.

[^265]But she gaue no answere, nether regarded it, and she called the childe Icabod, and sayde: The glory is gone from Israel, because the Arke of God was taken awaye, and hir brother in lawe and hir huszbande. And she sayde morouer: The glory is gone from Israel, for the Arke of God is take awaye.

AS for the Arke of God, the Philistynes toke it and broughte it from the stone of helpe vinto Aszdod in to the honse of Dagon, and set it besyde Dagon. And whan they of Aszdod rose vp early on the morowe, they founde Dagon Iyenge on his face rpon the earth, before the Arke of the LORDE. But they toke vp Dagon, and set him agayne in his place. Neuertheles whan they rose up early on the nexte morowe, they fomide Dagon lyenge on his face agayne vpon the earth before the Arke of the LORDE: but his heade and both his hādes hewen of vpon the threszholde, so that the block laie there onely. Therfore the prestes of Dagon, and all they that go in to his house, treade not ypó the threszsholde of Dagon at Aszdod vnto this daye.
But the hande of the LORDE was heuy vpon them of Aszdod, and destroyed them, and smote Aszdod and all the borders therof in secrete places. Whan the men of Aszdod sawe that they were so plaged, they sayde: § Let not the Arke of the God of Israel tary with vs, for his hande is to harde vpō vs a vpon oure god Dagon. And they sent forth and gathered all the prynces of the Philistynes vnto them, and sayde: What shal we do with the Arke of the God of Israel? Then answered they of Geth: Let the Arke of the God of Israel be borne aboute. And they caried the Arke of the God of lisrael romude aboute.

But whā they bare it aboute, there was a very greate rmmoure in the cite thorow the hande of the LOLIDE, and smote the people of the cite, from the smallest vito the greatest, and destroyed them in the secrete places. Then sent they the Arke of the LORDE vnto Ekron. But wha the Arke of the LORDE came vato Ekron, they of Ekron cried: They haue caried the Arke of God aboute vnto me, to slaye me ant my people.

Then sente they forth, and gathered all $\hat{y}$ pryuces of the Philistynes together, and sayde:
$\ddagger 1$ Reg. 3. a. § Deut. 3थ. e.

THUS was the Arke of the LORDE in the londe of the Philistynes seuen monethes. And the Philistynes called their prestes and soythsayers, and sayde: What shal we do with the Arke of the LORDE? Shewe vs, wher with shal we sende it vato hir place? They sayde: If ye wyll sende awaye the Arke of the God of Israel, sende it not awaye emptye, but geue a trespace offerynge: so shal ye be made whole, and ye shal knowe, why his hande departeth not from you.

They sayde: What is the trespace offeringe that we shall geue him? They answered: Fyue hynder partes of golde, and fyue golden myce, acordinge to the nombre of the fyue prynces of $\dot{y}$ Philistynes. For there hath bene one maner of plage vpon you all, and ypon youre prynces. Therfore must ye make youre hynder partes of one faszshion and youre myce, which haue destroyed youre londe, that ye maye geue the God of Israel the honoure : peraduenture his häde shal be the lighter vpon you and vpon youre God, and vpon youre

Go to now therfore, and make a new cart, and take two mylke kyne, vpon $\mathfrak{y}$ which there netuer eame yock, and yocke them to $\mathfrak{f}$ cart, and let their calues tary behynde them at home: and take ye the Arke of the LORDE and laye it vpon the cart : and the Iewels of golde that ye geue him for a trespace offeringe put in a coffer beside it, a sende it awaye and let it go. And loke well : yf it go the waie of hir awne coaste Beth Semes, the hath he done rs all this greate euell: Yf no, then shal ye knowe that his hande hath not touched vs, but $\frac{t}{y}$ it is happened vnto vs by chauce.
'The men dyd so, and toke two yonge mylke kyne, and yocked them to a cart, and helde their calnes at home, and layed the Arke of the [^266]LORDE vpon the eart, and the coffer with the golden myce, and with the ymages of their discase. And the kyne wente straight waye vnto Beth Semes vpon one hye strete, and wente on blearynge, and turned nether to the righte hande ner to the lefte. And the prynces of the Philistynes wente after them vito ${ }^{\circ}$ coast of Beth Semes.

The Beth Samites were euen reapynge downe their wheate haruest in the valley, and lyfte vp their eyes, and sawe the Arke, and reioysed to se it. The cart came in to the felde of losua the Beth Semite, and there it stode styll. And there was a greate stone, and they claue the tymber of the cart, and offred the kyne moto the LORDE for a burntofferynge.

But the Leuites toke downe the Arke of the LORDE, and the coffer that was by it, wherin the lewels of golde were, and set the ypon the greate stone. The men of Beth Semes offred burntofferynges, and other offerynges also vnto the LORDE the same daye. And whan the fyue prynces of the Philistynes had sene it, they departed agayne the same daye towarde Ekron.

These are the golden diseases, that the Philistynes offred for a trespace offerynge vnto the LORDE: Aszdod one, Gasa one : Ascalon one, Gath one, and Ekron one: and golden inyce, acordynge to the nombre of all the cities of the Philistynes amonge the fyue prynces, from the walled cite vato the vyllage, and vato the greate playne felde, wher ypon they set the Arke of the LORDE (which was) vnto this daye vpon the felde of Iosua the Beth Semite.

And certaine of Beth Sames were slaine beeause they had sene $\frac{8}{y}$ Arke of the LORDE, and he slewe fyftye thousande and seuentye men of the people. Then mourned the people, because the LORDE had done so greate a slaughter in the people. And the men at Beth Semes sayde: Who maye stode before the LORDE so holy a God? And to who shal he go frō vs? And they sent messaungers to $\dot{y}$ inhabiters of Kiriath Learim, saiege : The Philistynes have bronght the Arke of God agayne, come downe, « fetch it vp wito you.

Samuel iudged Israel as loge as he liued, a wëte aboute enery yeare vnto Bethel a Gilgal $\sqrt{3}$ Mispa: © whā he had iudged Israel in ail these places, he came agayne vnto lamath for there was his house, a there he iudged Israel, © builded an altare there vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE.

a CHERE was a man of Ben Iamin named * Cis, the somne of Abiel, the sonne of Zeor, the sonne of Bethorah, $\dot{y}$ sonne of Apiah, the some of a man of Iemini, a valeaunt man, which had a sonne named Sanl, which was so goodly a yonge man, that there was not a goodlier amonge the children of Israel, higher by the heade then all the people. Cis the father of Saul had lost his asses, and he sayde vnto Saul his sonne: Take one of the children with the, get the 'p, go thy waye, and seke the asses. And he wente his waye thorow mount Ephraim, and thorow the lode of Solisa, and founde them not. 'They wente thorow the lode of Saalim, a there they were not. They passed thorow y lode of lemini, a foinde the not. But what they came in to the londe of Zuph, Saul sayde vnto the childe that was with him: Come, let vs go home agayne, lest my father let go the asses, and take care for vs. He sayde: Beholde, here is an honorable man of God in this cite, all that he sayeth, commeth to passe. Let vs go thither now, peraduenture he maye shewe vs oure waye which we go. But saul saide vito his childe: 'Though we shulde go, what bryuge we the man? The sayde Samuel vuto Isai: Sende a cause him to be fetched, for we will not syt downe at the table, vntyll he come. Then sent he, I caused him be broughte. And he was well colonred with fayre eyes a of a beutyfull countename. And the LORDE saide: Aryse, and anoynte him, that is he.

The toke samuel his oyle horne, s anoynted him amonge his brethre. And the sprete of the LORDE came ypō Danid frō ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ daye forth. As for Samuel, he gat him vp, a wente vnto Ramath.

But the sprete of the LORDE departed from Saul, and an euell sprete from y LORDE vexed him. Then sayde Sauls seruauntes vnto him: Beholde, an euell sprete from God vexeth the. Let oure lorde saie vito his seruauntes which stonde before him, ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ they seke a man which can playe vpon the harpe, and instrumente, that whan the euell sprete of God cometh vpon the, he maye playe with his hande, to ease the withall. Then sayde Saul vito his seruaūtes: Prouyde me a mā, that can playe well rpon the instrumente, a brynge him vito me.

Then answered one of the children, a sayde: Beholde, I sawe a sonne of Isai $\mathfrak{y}$ Bethleemite, which can playe vpon the instrumēte, an honest a valeanit man, and one $\frac{t}{y}$ hath vnderstōdinge in matters, © is welfauoured. TTHE Philistynes gathered their hoost to y battayl, and came together to Socho in Iuda, a pitched their tentes betwene Socho (t) Aseka, at the ende of Damin. But Saul a the mé of Israel came together, © pitehed in the Oke valley, $s$ prepared them selues to the battayll agaynst the Philistynes. And the Philistynes stode vpon a hyll on the one syde, and the Israelites vpon a hyll on the other syde, so that there was a valley betwene them.

Then stepte there forth from amoge the Philistynes a stoute bolde man, named Goliath of $\dagger$ Gath, sixe cubites and an hande breth hye, and harl an hehnet of stele on his heade, and a fast habergion vpon him, and the weight of his hahergion was fyne thousande Sicles of stele, and harnesse of stele had he vpon his legges, and a shylde of stele vpon his shulders: and the shaft of his speare was like a weuers lome, and the yron of his speare had sixe hundreth Sicles of yron, and his wapen bearer wente before him.

And he stode and called vnto the hoost of Israel, and sayde vito them: Wherfore are ye come forth to prepare youre selues to the battayll? Am not I a Philistyne, and ye the seruauntes of Saul? Chose one amonge you to come downe vnto me: yf he can fighte agaynst me and slaye me, then wil we be youre seruauntes: but yf I can ouercome him and slaye him, then shal ye be oure seruantes, to do vs seruyce. And the Philistyne sayde: I hane spokè diszdanedly vnto the hoost of Israel this daye. Gene me one, and let vs fighte together. Whan Saul and all Israel herde these wordes of $\dot{y}$ Philistyne, they were astonnyed, and sore afrayed.

But Dauid was the somne of a man of Ephrata of Bethleem Iuda, whose name was Isai, which had eight sonnes, and was an olde man in Sauls tyme, and was well stryeken in age amonge men. And the thre eldest somes of Isai were gone with Saul to the battayll. And there names were these: Eliab the first borne, Abinadab the seconde, and Samma the thirde. But Dauid was the yongest of all. So whan the thre eldest were gone with Saul to the battayll, Dauid wente agayne from Saul, to kepe his fathers shepe at Bethleem. But the Philistyne stepte forth early in the mornynge and at euen, and stode there fortye dayes.

Isai sayde mnto Dauid his sonne: Take this Epha of firmentye for thy brethren, and these ten loaues of bred (and runne to the hoost vnto thy brethren) a these ten new cheses, and brynge them to $\dot{y}$ eaptayne, and loke how thy brethren do, whether it go well with them or no, and take what they byd the. But Sanl and they, and all the men of Israel were in the Oke valley, and foughte agaynst the Philistynes.

Then Dauid gat him vp early in the mornynge, and commytted the shepe to $\dot{y}$ keper, and toke his burthen, wente his waye, as Isai commaunded him, and came to the tēt. And the hoost was gone forth, and had prepared them selues, and cried in the battayl: For Israel had set them selues in araye, and the Philistynes were agaynst their hoost in their araye also.
'Then lefte Dauid the vessell that he hare, with the keper of the stuffe, and ranne to the hoost, and wente in, and saluted his brethren. And whyle he was yet talkynge with them, beholde, then came yp the stoute bolde man, whose name was Goliath, the Philistine of Gath, out of the Philistynes hoost, and spake like as afore, and Danid herde it. But euery man of Israel, whan he sawe the man, fled from him, and was sore afrayed of hin.

And euery man in Israel sayde: Haue ye sene the man commynge vp hither? For he is come vp hither, to speake diszdanedly vnto Israel. And who so euer smyteth him, him wyll the kynge make ryche, and geue him his doughter, and make his fathers house fre in Israel.

Then sayde Dauid vito the men that stode by him: What shalbe done to the man, that smyteth this Philistyne, and turneth this shame awaye from Israel? For what is he this Philistyne this vneireneysed, that defyeth the hoost of y lyuynge God? Then the people tolde him as afore: Thus shall it be done vuto $\hat{y}$ man that smyteth him. And Eliab his greater brother herde him talke with the men, and was very wroth agaynst Dauid, and sayde: Wherfore art thou come downe? and why hast thou left a fewe shepe in the wyldernesse? I knowe thy presumptuonsnesse well ynough, and the wickednesse of thine hert: for thou art come downe to se the battayll. Dauid answered: What haue I downe now? Is there not an occasion? And he turned him selfe from him vnto another, and spake acordinge as he had sayde before. Then the people answered him like as afore.

And whan they herde the wordes which Dauid sayde, they tolde them in the presence of Saul, and he caused him be fetched. And Dauid sayde vnto Saul: Let no mans hert be discoraged because of him. Thy seruaunt shall go, and fighte with the Philistyne. Neuertheles Saul sayde vnto Danid: Thou art not able to go agaynst this Phylistyne to fighte with himı, for thou art but a childe: but this is a man of warre from his youth up.

Dauid sayde vnto Saul: Thy seruaunt kepte ze his fathers shepe, and there came a lyon and a Bere, and caried awaye a shepe from the flocke, then wente I forth after him, and smote him, and delyuered it out of his mouth. *And whan he wolde haue bene vpon me, I toke

[^275]|him by his beerde, and smote him, and slewe him. So thy seruant smote both the Lyon and $\dot{y}$ Bere. Therfore shall this Philistyne this vacircumersed be euen as one of them: for he hath defyed the hoost of the lyuynge God. And Daind sayde: The LORIEE that delyuered me from iy Lyon and Beer, shall delyuer me also from this Philistyne.

And Saul sayde vito Dauid: Go thy waye, the LORDE be with the. And Saul clothed Dauid with his elothes, and set an helmet of stele y pon his heade, and put an habergion ypō him. And Danid girled his swerde aboue his clothes, and begame to go, for he had neuer bene rsed to it afore. Then sayde Dauid vnto saul: I can not go thus, for I haue not bene rsed to it, and so he laied it from him, and toke his staff in his hande, and chose fyue slighte stones out of the ryuer, and put them in the shepardes bagge which he had by him, and toke a slynge in his hande, and made him to the Philistyne. And the Philistyne wente forth, and made him to Dauid, land his wapen bearer before him.
\$f Now whan the Philistyne loked a sawe Dauid, he thoughte scorne of him: for he was but a childe, well coloured, and beutyfull to loke vpon. And the Philistyne sayde vnto Dauid: Am I a dogg then, that thou commest vnto me with a staffe? And he cursed Dauid by his God, and sayde vato Dauid: Come hither to me, I wil geue thy flesh to the foules 'vider the heauen, and to the beastes in the felde. Neuertheles Dauid sayde vato the Philistyue: Thou commest vito me with swerde, speare and shylde. But I come vito the in the name of the LORDE Zebaoth the God of the hoost of Israel, whom thou hast despysed. This daye shall the LORDE delyuer the in to my häde, that I maye smyte the, and take thy heade from the, and geue the bodies of the hoost of the Philistynes this dave vanto the foules vider the heauen, and to the wylde beestes vpon the earth, that all the Jonde maye knowe $\dot{y}$ Israel hath a God. And all this congregacion shal knowe, that the LORDE saueth nether thorow swerde ner speare: for the battayll is the LORDES, a the shal delyuer you in to oure handes.

Now whan the Philistyne gat him vp, and wente forth and drue nye vito Dauid, Dauid made haiste, and rame from $\dot{y}$ hoost vuto the Philistyne. And Dauid put his hāde in his bagg, and toke out a stone, a thrue it with the slynge, *and hytt the Philistyne euen in the fore heade, so that the stone stacke in his fore heade, and he fell downe to the grounde spon his face.

So Dauid ouercame $\mathfrak{y}$ Philistyne with the slynge and with $\dot{y}$ stone, and smote him, and slewe him. And for so moch as Dautid had no swerde in his hande, he rane and stode ouer $\dot{y}$ Philistyne, tand toke his swerde, and drue it out of the sheeth, and slewe him, and smote of his heade withall. Whan the Philistynes sawe that the strongest of them was deed, ; they fled. And the men of 1srael and luda gat the rp , and cryed and folowed vpon the Philistynes, tyll they came vito the valley, and to the Portes of Ekron. And the Philistynes fell downe slayne vnto Gath and to Ekron. And the children of Israel turned agayne from chasynge of the Philistynes, and spoyled their tentes. But Dauid toke the heade of the Philistyne, and broughte it vnto lerusalem, as for his armoure, he layed it in his tente.

Whan Saul sawe Dauid go forth agaynst the Philistyne, he saide vnto $$$ Abner his chefe captayne: Abner, whose sonne is this childe? Abner sayde: As truly as thy soule lyueth O kynge, I wote not. The kynge sayde: Axe thē whose sonne the yonge mā is. Now whan Dauid came agayne from the slaughter of the Philistyne, Abner toke him, and broughte him before Saul, and he had the Philistynes heade in his hande. And Saul sayde vnto him: Whose sonne art thou, thou yonge man? Dauid sayde: I am a sonne of thy seruaunt Isai the Bethleemite.

AND whan he had made an ende of talkynge with Saul, the soule of Ionathas was bounde with the soule of Dauid, and Ionathas loued him as his owne soule. And Saul toke him the same daye, and let him not go agayne to his fathers house. And lonathas and Dauid made a conenaunt together, for he loued him as his owne soule. And lonathas put of his owne cote that he had vpon him, and gaue it vnto Dauid: yee and his cloke, his swerde, his bowe, and his girdell. And Dauid wente forth whither so euer Saul sent |him, and behaued him selfe wysely. And Saul set him ouer the men of warre, and he pleased all the people well, and all the seruauntes of Saul.

It fortuned, that whan Dauid was come agayne from the slaughter of the Philistyne, the wemen wente out of all the cities of Israel with songes 5 daunses, to mete kynge Saul, with tymbrels, with myrth, and with fyddels. And the wemen sange one to another, and played a sayde: * Saul hath smytten his thousande: but Dauid his ten thousande.

Then was Saul very wroth, and $\stackrel{t}{y}$ worde displeased him sore, and he sayde: They have ascrybed ten thousande vnto Dauid, and but one thousande vito me: what shal he have more but the kyngdome? And from that daye forth, Saul loked sowerly vpō Dauid.
The nexte daye after came the euell sprete of God vpon Saul, and prophecyed in $y$ myddes of the house. But Dauid played on the instrumente with his hande, as he was wonte daylie. And Saul had a iauelynge in his hande, and east it, and thoughte: I wyll stycke Dauid fast to the wall. Neuerthelesse Dauid turned hinnselfe twyse awaye from him. And Saul was afrayed of Dauid: for the LORDE was with him, and was departed from Saul. Then Saul put him from him, and set him to be prynce ouer a thousande men, and he went out and in before the people. And Dauid behaued himselfe wysely in all his doynges, and the LORDE was with him.

Now whan Saul sawe that he was so exceadynge wyse, he stode in feare of him. But all Israel and Iuda loued Dauid, for he wente out and in before them. And Saul sayde vnto Dauid: Beholde, my greatest doughter Merob +wyl I geue the to wyfe: be stronge now, a gouerne the warres of the LORDE. For Saul thought: my hāde shal not be vpon him, but the hande of y Philistynes. Neuertheles Dauid answered Saul: Who am I? a what is my life $\pi$ the kynired of my father in Israel, that I shulde mary the kinges doughter?

But whan the tyme came, that Merob $y$ doughter of Saul shulde haue bene geue vnto Dauid, she was geuen vato Adriel y Meholathite to wyfe. Neuerthelesse Michol Sauls doughter loued Dauid. Whan this was tolde Saul, $\mathfrak{y}$ matter pleased him well, a he sayde: I wyl geue him her, $\dot{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ she maye be a snare [^276]vnto him, $\pi$ that the handes of $\%$ Philistynes maye come vpon him. And he sayde vnto Dauid: This daye shalt thou be my doughters huszbäde $\hat{y}$ seeōde time. And Saul spake vnto his seruantes: Talke with Danid secretly a saye: Beholde, the kinge hath pleasure in the, and all his seruauntes lone the, mary thou therfore the kynges doughter.

And Sauls seruauntes spake these wordes in the eares of Dauid. But Dauid saide : Thynke ye it but a small matter, to mary the kynges doughter? As for me, I am but a poore symple man. And Sauls seruauntes tolde him agayne, and sayde: Soch wordes hath Dauid spoken. Saul sayde: Then saye ye vito Danid: 'The kynge desyreth no dowry, but onely an hundreth foreszkynnes of the Philistynes, that vengeaunce maye be taken of the kinges enemies. Howbeit Saul thought to cause Datuid be slayne by the hädes of the Philistynes. Then his seruauntes tolde Dauid these wordes, and Dauid was contente with the matter, to mary the kynges doughter.

And after a fewe dayes Dauid gatt him rp, and wente with his men, and smote two hundreth men amonge the Philistynes. And Dauid broughte their foreszkymes, and made their nombre sufficient vnto the kynge, $\frac{t}{y}$ he mighte mary the kynges doughter. The Saul gaue him his doughter Michol to wyfe. And Saul sawe and perceaned, that the LORDE was with Dauid. And Michol Sauls doughter loued him. Then was Saul the more afrayed, and beeame his enemye as loge as he lyued. And whan the prynces of the Philistynes wēte forth, Dauid behaued him selfe more wysely then all the seruauntes of Saul in their outgoynge: so that his name was in greate reputacion.

SAUL spake to Ionathas his sonne, and to all his seruauntes, that they shulde kyll Dauid. $\ddagger$ Neuerthelesse Ionathas the sonne of Saul loned Danid exceadingly, and tolde him, and sayde: Saul my father goeth aboute to slaye the. And Ionathas reported $\hat{y}$ best of Danid vnto Saul his father, and sayde wnto him: Oh let not the kynge synne agaynst his seruaunt, for he hath not synned agaynst the, and his doynge is very necessary for the, * he put his lyfe in his hande also, and smote the Philistyne, t the LORDE dyd a greate bealth wnto all Israel: this hast thou sene, and reioysed therof. 'Then Ionathas called Dauid, and tolde him all these wordes, and brought him to Saul, so that he was in presence like as afore tyme.

But there arose a battayll agayne, and Dauid wente forth, and fought agaynst the Philistynes, and smote a greate slaughter, so that they fled before him. Neuertheles $\dot{y}$ euell sprete of the LORDE came rpon Saul, and he sat in his house, and had a iauelynge in his hande. But Dauid plaied vpon the instrument with his hāde. Notwithstondinge Saul sent his messaungers to Dauids house, that they shulde laye wayte for him, and kyll him in the mornynge. Michol Dauids wyfe tolde him this, and sayde: Yf thou saue not thy sonle this night, thou shalt dye tomorow. + Then Michol let him downe thorow the wyndow, so that he wente his waye, fled, and escaped. Nenerthelesse Saul sent messaungers to se Dauid, a sayde: Bringe him vp to me with the bed, that he maye be slayne.

Now whan the messaungers came, beholde, the ymage laye in the bed, and a goates szkyme at the heade of it. Then sayde Saul vnto Michol: Why hast thou begyled me, and let myne enemye go, that he mighte escape? Michol sayde vito Saul: He sayde vnto me: Let me go, or I wyl kyll the. As for Dauid, he fled, and escaped, and came to Samuel vito Ramath, and tolde him all $\frac{t}{y}$ Saul had Whan this was tolde Saul, he sent other messaungers, which prophecied likewyse. Then sente he messaungers the thyrde tyme, and they in like maner prophecyed. Then wente he himselfe also vnto Ramath, and whan he came to the greate well which is at Secho, he axed and sayde: Where is Samuel and Dauid? Then was it tolde him: beholde, at Naioth in Ramath. Dauid sayde: Who shal brynge me worde, yf thy father geue the an harde answere? Ionathas sayde rnto Dauid: Come, let vs go forth in to the felde. And they wente out both in to $\hat{y}$ felde. And Ionathas sayde vnto Dauid:

And Saul spake nothinge that daye, for he thoughte: There is somwhat happend vnto him, that he is not cleane. On the seconde daye of the new Mone, whan Dauid was myssed in his place, Saul saide vnto Ionathas his sonne: Wherfore is not the sonne of Isai come to the table nether yesterdaye ner to daye?

Ionathas answered Saul: He prayed me that he mighte go vnto Bethleem, and sayde: Let me go, for oure kynred hath a sacrifyce to do in the cyte, and my brother hath sent for me himselfe: yf I haue founde fauoure now in thy syghte, I wyll go, and se my brethren: therfore is he not come to the kynges table. ${ }^{2}$ DAUID came to Nobe to $\frac{8}{y}$ prest Ahimelech. And Ahimelech was astonnyed, whan he sawe Dauid comminge, and sayde vnto him: Why commest thou alone, and noman is with the? The prest answered Dauid, and sayde: I haue no comen bred vnder my hande, but the holy bred, yf the yonge men haue onely refrained them selues from wemen. Dauid answered the prest, and sayde vito him: The wemen were kepte thre dayes from vs whan we departed forth, and the yonge mens vessels were holy. But this waye is viholy, neuerthelesse it shalbe sanctifyed to daye in the instrumentes. §Then the prest gave him of y holy, in so moeh as there was none other bred but the shewbredes, which were taken vp before the LORDE, that there might be

But the same daye was there a man sparred in before the LORDE, one of Sauls seruauntes, named Doeg an Edomite, y mightiest amonge Sauls hyrdmen. And Dauid sayde vito Ahimelech: Is there not a speare or a swerde here vnder thine hande? I haue not taken my swerde and weapens with me: for the kynges matter requyred haist. The prest sayde: The swerde of Goliath the Philistyne llwhom thou smotest in the Oke valley, is here wrapped in a cloth behynde the onerbody cote. Yf thou wylt haue it, take it, for here is els none but it. Dauid sayde: There is not soch another, geue me it.

And Dauid gat him vp, and fled from Saul, and came to Achis $\dot{y}$ kynge of Gath. But Achis seruauntes sayde vnto him: This is Dauid the kynge of the londe, of whom they sunge in the daunse, and sayde: ${ }^{\text {I Saul hath }}$ smytten his thousande, but Dauid his ten thousande. And Dauid toke these wordes to hert, and was sore afrayed of Achis the kynge of Gath, and altered his countenaunce before them, and shewed himselfe as he had bene madd in their handes, and stackered towarde the dores of the gate, and his slauerynges ranne downe his beerd. Then sayde Achis vuto his seruauntes: Beholde, ye se that the man is out of his wyt, why hane ye brought him vito me? Haue I to fewe madd men, that ye haue brought this lither to be madd before me? Shulde he come in to my house?

DAUID wente frō thence, a fled vnto the caue of Adullam. Whan his brethren and all his fathers house herde that, they came downe thither vuto him. And there gathered vnto him all men that were in trouble and det, and sory of hert, and he became their heade, so that there were with him vpon a foure hundreth men.

And Dauid wente from thence towarde Mispa in the londe of the Moabites, and sayde vito the kynge of the Moabites: Let my father and my mother go out and in amonge you, tyll II se what God wil do with me. And he lelte them before the kynge of $\dot{y}$ Moabites, so that they remayned by him, as

Now whyle Saul dwelt at Gibea vnder a groue in Rama, he had a lauelinge in his hande, and all his seruauntes stode by him. Then sayde Saul vnto his seruauntes that stode by hin: Heare ye children of Iemini : Shal the sonne of Isai geue lōdes and vynyardes vnto you all, a make you all captaynes outer thousandes and ouer hūdreds, that ye haue all conspyred agaynst me, and there is no mā that sheweth it before myne eares, *for so moch as my sonne also hath made a couenaunt with the sonne of lsai? Then answered Doeg y Edomite which stode besyde Sauls seruauntes, and sayde: $\dagger 1$ sawe the sonne of Isai, that he came vnto Nobe, to Ahimelech $\hat{y}$ sonne of Achitob, which axed councell at the LORDE for him, and gaue him fode, ז the swerde of Goliath the Plilistyne.
Then sent the kynge, and caused to call Ahimelech the prest the sonne of Achitob, and all his fathers house, the prestes that were at Nobe, and they came all to the kynge. And Saul sayde: Heare thou sonne of Achitob. He saide: Here am I my lorde. Ahimelech answered the kynge and saide : And who is amonge all thy seruauntes like Dauid, which is faithfull, and hath maried the kynges doughter, and goeth in thine obedience, $\pi$ is honorably taken in thine house? Haue I begonne then first this daye to axe councell at God for him? That be farre fro me. Not withstondinge the kynges seruauntes wolde not laye their handes vpon $\dot{f}$ prestes of the LORDE, to slaye them. Then saide £ kynge rnto Doeg: Turne the, and slaye the prestes. $\ddagger$ Doeg the Edomite turned him, and slewe the prestes, so that the same daye there dyed fyue and foure score men, which wayre ouerbody cotes of lynnen. And Nob the cite of the prestes smote he with the edge of the swerde, both men and wemen, children and sucklynges, oxen and asses, and shepe.

Neuerthelesse there escaped a sonne of Ahimelech (the sonne of Achitob) whose name was Abiathar, and fled after Dauid, and tolde him, that Saul had slayue $\mathfrak{y}$ prestes of the LORDE. Dauid sayde vito Abiathar: I knewe well the same daye that Doeg the Edomite was there, that he wolde tell Saul. I am giltye of the soules of thy fathers house. Abyde thou with me, and feare not. AND it was tolde Dauid: Beholde, the Philistynes fight against Cegila, and spoyle the barnes. Then Dauid axed at the LORDE, and sayde: Shal I go, a smyte these Philistynes? And the LORDE sayde vnto Dauid: Go thy waye, thou shalt smyte the Philistynes, and delyuer Cegila. But $\mathfrak{y}$ men that were with Dauid, sayde vuto him: Beholde, we are here in feare in Iewry, and shall we go to Cegila vnto the hoost of the Philistynes? The Dauid axed at the LORDE agayne. And the LORDE answered hin, and sayde: $\mathrm{V}_{\mathrm{p}}$, get the downe to Cegila, for 1 wil delyuer the Philistynes in to thy hande.

So Dauid weute with his men vnto Cegila, and foughte agaynst the Philistynes, © droue awaye their catell, and smote them with a greate slaughter. Thus Dauid delyuered them of Cegila. For whan Abiathar the sonne of Ahimelech fled vnto Dauid at Cegila, he bare downe the ouerbody cote with hin.

Thē was it tolde Saul, that Dauid was come

And Saul caused for to call all the people downe to $y$ battaill vnto Cegila, ${ }_{y}^{t}$ they might bescge Dauid and his men. But whan Dauid perceaued $\frac{t}{y}$ Saul intēded eucll against him, he saide vnto Abiathar $y$ prest: Brynge me hither the ouerbody cote. And Dauid sayde: O LORDE God of 1srael, thy seruaunt hath herde, that Saul goeth aboute to come for to destroye the cite of Cegila for my sake. Shal the citysens of Cegila delyuer me ouer in to his handes? And shal Saul come downe, as thy seruaunt hath herde? Tell thy seruaunt this, O LORDE God of lsrael. And the LORDE saide: He shal come downe.
© Dauid sayde: Shall the citysens of Cegila delyuer me and my men in to Sauls handes? The LORDE sayde: Yee. Thē Dauid gat him up with his mé, of whom there were vpon a sixe hundreth, a walked whither they coulde. Now whan it was tolde Saul that Dauid was escaped from Cegila, he let his iourney stonde. As for Dauid, he remayned in the wildernes in the castell, and abode vpon the mount in the wildernes of Siph. But Saul soughte him as longe as he lyued. Neuertheles God gaue him not in to his handes. And Dauid sawe, that Saul was gone forth to seke after his life. But Dauid was in the wildernes of Siph, in the wodd.

Then Ionathas the sonne of Saul gat him rp, and wēte vnto Dauid in to the wod, and strengthed his hande in God, and sayde vnto him: Feare not, my father Sauls hande shal not finde $\hat{y}$ : and thou shalt be kynge ouer Israel, so will I be the nexte vnto the. And - $-\frac{t}{y}$ my father knoweth right well. *And they made a couenaunt both together before the LORDE. And Dauid remayned in the wodd. As for Ionathas, he wente home agayne.

But the +Siphites wente vp to Saul vnto Gibeath, and sayde: Is not Dauid hyd with vs in the castell in $\dot{y}$ wodd, rpon moūt Hachila, which lyeth on the righte hande of the wildernesse? Let the kynge come downe now therfore acordinge to all the desyre of his hert, and we wyll delyuer him in to the kynges hande. Then sayde Saul: Blessed be ye of [^278]the LORDE, that ye haue had pytie rpon me: Go youre waye now therfore, and be sure, that ye maye knowe and se in what place his fete haue bene, and who hath sene him there: for it is tolde me, that he is full of sotiltye. If he be in the londe, 1 wyl enquere after him amonge all the thousandes in Iuda.

Then gat they them vp, and wente their $\mathrm{I}^{2}$ waye vnto Siph before Saul. But Dauid and his men were in the wyldernes of Maō, euen in the felde on the righte hande of the wildernes. Now whan Saul wente thither with his men to seke him, it was tolde Dauid and he gat him downe to the rocke, and abode in the wildernesse of Mahon. Whan Saul herde that, he folowed after Dauid in the wildernesse of Mahon. And Saul with his men wente on the one syde of the hyll: Dauid with his men on y other syde of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ hill. NOW whan Saul came agayne from the Philistines, it was tolde him: Beholde, Dauid is in the wyldernes of Engaddi. And Saul toke thre thousande chosen men out of all Israel, and wente to seke Dauid with his men vpon the stony rockes of the wylde goates. Then sayde Dauids men nnto him: Lo, this is the daye, wherof the LORDE thy God hath sayde vnto the: Beholde, I wyll delyuer thyne enemye in to thy hande, that thou mayest do with him what it pleaseth the. And Dauid stode vp, a cut of the typpe of Sauls garment quyetly. Neuertheles it smote

But whan Saul gat him vp out of the caue, and was goinge his waye, Dauid rose vp also after him, and wente out of the caue, and eried behynde Saul, a sayde: My lorde the kynge. And Saul loked behynde him. And Dauid bowed downe his face to the earth, and worshipped, and sayde vnto Saul: Why herkenest thou vnto the wordes of men, that saye: Dauid seketh thy mysfortune? Beholde, thine eyes se this daye that the LORDE gaue the in to my hande in the eaue, and I was counceled to slaye the: Neuertheles thou wast fauoured, for I sayde: I wil not laye my hande vpon my lorde, for he is the LORDES anoynted. AND Samuel dyed, and all Israel gathered them selues together, mourned for him, a buried him in his house at Ramath. As for Dauid, he rose, and wente downe in to the wyldernesse of Paran. And there was a man at Maon, and his possession at Carmel, and the man was of greate power, and had thre thousande shepe, and a thousande goates. And it fortuned that he elypped his shepe at Carmel, and his name was Nabal, but his wyues name was Abigail, and she was a woman of good vnderstondinge, a bewtyfull of face. But the man was harde, and wieked in his doynges, and was one of Caleb.

Now whan Dauid herde in the wyldemes $\underset{y}{t}$ Nabal clypped his shepe, he sent out ten yonge men, a saide vnto them: Go vp vnto Carmel, © whan ye come to Nabal, salute him frendly on my behalfe, a saye: Good lucke, peace be with the $\pi$ thine house, a with all ${ }^{ \pm}$thou hast. I haue herde saye that thou hast shepe clyppers. Now thy shepherdes whom thou hast, have bene with vs, we haue done them no dishonoure, and they wated nothinge of their nombre, as longe as they were at Carmel: Axe thy yonge men, they shal tell the, and let thy yonge men fynde fauoure in thy sighte: for we are come in a good daye, geue thy seruauntes a thy somne Dauid what thy hande fyndeth.

And wha Dauids yonge men came, and spake all these wordes on Dauids behalfe unto Nabal, they lefte of. But Nabal answered Dauids seruauntes, $\pi$ sayde: What is he $\dot{y}$ Dauid? ts who is the sonne of Isai? There are many seruauntes now ${ }^{t}$ runne awaye from their masters. Shulde I take my bred, water and flesh, that I haue slayne for my clyppers, a geue it vito mé whom I knowe not whence they are?

Thē Dauids yonge mē turned their waye agayne. And whan they came agayne vnto him, they tolde him all these wordes. The sayde Dauid vnto his men: Euery man gyrde his swerde aboute him. And enery one gyrde his swerde aboute him. And Dauid gyrde his swerde aboute him also, and there wète vp after him ypon a foure hundreth men, but two hundreth remayned with the stuffe.
(c) Neuertheles one of the yonge men tolde Abigail Nabals wife, and sayde: Beholde, Dauid sent messaungers out of the wyldernes to blesse oure lorde, Notwithstondinge he was fearce vpō them, and yet haue they bene very profitable men vnto vs , and haue done vs no dishonoure, and we wanted none of the nombre as loge as we watked with them, whan we were in the felde: but they have bene oure wall daye and nighte, as longe as we kepte the shepe by them. Take hede now therfore, and loke well what thou doest, for there is surely a mysfortune at hande agaynst oure lorde, $\pi$ agaynst all his house. And he is a man of Belial, to whom no man darre saye eny thinge. Then Abigail made haist, and toke two humdred loaues of bred, and two botels of wyne, and fyue shepe ready dighte, and fyue measures of firmentye, and an hundreth frayles of rasens, and two hundreth fraỵles of fygges, a layed them vpo asses, and sayde to hir yonge men: Go ye youre waye before me, beholde, I wyl come after. And she tolde Nabal hir housbāde nothinge therof. And as she rode vpo the asse, and wente downe in the shadowe of y 'hill, beholde, Dauid a his mē met hir downe, so that she came ypon them.
But Dauid sayde: Wel, all that this man had in $\hat{y}$ wyldernes, haue I kepte for naughte, so that there wanted nothinge of all that he had, and he rewardeth me euell for good. God do this and yet more vnto the enemies of Dauid, yf vatyll tomorow in the mornynge I leaue this man (of all that he hath) so moch as one that maketh water agaynst $\dot{y}$ wall. Now whan Abigail sawe Dauid, she lighte downe from the asse in all the haist, and fell vpō hir face before Dauid, and worshiped him to the grounde, and fell at his fete, and sayde: Oh my lorde, let this trespace be myne, and let thy haudmayde speake before thine eares, and heare the wordes of thy handmayden: Let not my lorde set his hert agaynst this Nabal the man of Belial, for he is a foole, acordinge as his name is called: his name is foole, and foolishnes is with him. As for me thy handmayde, I sawe not my lordes yonge men, whom thou dyddest sende.

But now my lorde, as truly as the LORDE lyueth, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, the LORDEhath kepte the backe, ${ }_{y}^{t}$ thou shuldest not come agaynst bloude, and he hath delyuered thine hande.

Thine enemyes be now as Nabal, and so be they that wolde my lorde euell. Here is $\hat{y}$ blessynge, $\frac{t}{y}$ thy handinayde hath brought my lorde, take it, and geue it vnto the yonge men, that walke suder my lorde. For a sure house shal ${ }^{\circ}$ LORDE make my lorde, which fighteth the fighte of the LORDE, and no euell shall be founde in the all thy life longe. And yf eny man ryse vp to persecute $\mathfrak{g}$, and to laye wayte for thy soule, then shal the soule of my lorde be bounde in the bundell of ${ }^{\circ}$ lyuynge, euen with the LORDE thy God. But y soule of thine enemies shalbe turned backe with the slynge. Whan the LORDE therfore doth all this good for my lorde (which he hath promysed the) and commaundeth $\dot{y}$ to be his Duke ouer Israel, then shal it be no stomblinge blocke ner occasion of fallynge vito my lordes hert, that thou hast not shed bloude without a cause, and auenged thy selfe, then shal $\dot{y}$ LORDE do good suto my lorde, and thou shalt thynke vpon thy handmayden.

Then saide Dauid vnto Abigail: Blessed be the LORDE God of Israel, which hath sent the to mete me this daye: and blessed be thy speach, and blessed be thou, which hast kepte me backe this daye, that I am not come agaynst bloude, to auenge me with myne awne hande. Verely (as truly as the LORDE the God of Israel lyueth, which hath hyndred me that I shulde do the no euell.) If thou haddest not met me in all the haist, Nabal shulde not have had lefte him untyll y lighte mornynge, so moch as one that maketh water agaynst the wall. So Dauid toke of hir häde what she had broughte him, and sayde vnto her: Go vp in peace vnto thy house: beholde, I haue herkened vnto thy voyce, and accepted thy personne.

But whan Abigail came to Nabal, beholde, he had prepared a feast in his honse like a kynges feast, and his hert was mery, for he was very dronken. And she tolde him nothinge, nether small ner greate vntyll $\dot{y}$ cleare mornynge. But whan it was daye, $\pi$ the wyne was come from Nabal, his wife tolde him these thinges.
$\mathfrak{6}$ Then was his hert deed in his body, so that he became euen as a stone: and ouer ten dayes the LORDE smote him, so ${ }_{y}^{t}$ he dyed. Whan Dauid herde that Nabal was deed, he sayde: Blessed be $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE which hath auenged my rebuke on Nabal, and preserued his seruaunt from euell. And the LORDE hath rewarded Nabal that euell ypon his heade.

And Dauid sent, and caused to talke with Abigail, $\frac{y}{y}$ he mighte take her to wife. And whan Dauids seruauntes came to Abigail unto Carmel, they spake vnto her, and saide: Dauid hath sent vs vnto the, that he maye take y to wife. She rose vp , and worshipped vpon hir face vnto the earth, and sayde: beholde, here is thy handmayde, that she maie do seruyce mnto the seruauntes of my lorde, and to waszshe their fete. And Abigail made haist, and gat her vp , and rode vpo an asse, and fyue maydens that were vnder her, and wente after Dauids messaungers, and became his wife. Dauid toke Ahinoam of Iesrael also, and they both became his wyues. But Saul gaue Michol his doughter the wife of Dauid vnto Phalti ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ sonne of Lais of Gallim.

Dauid wente vp with his men, and fell in to the londe of the Gessurites and Girsites, and *Amalechites: for these were the inhabiters of this londe of olde, as thou commest to Sur vnto the lōde of Egipte. But whī Dauid smote y londe, the let nether man ner woman lyue, and toke the shepe, oxen, asses, Camels and rayment, and returned and came to Achis. So whan Achis spake: Whither fell ye in to daye? Dauid sayde: Towarde the south parte of luda, towarde ${ }^{\circ}$ south parte of the Ierahmielites, a towarde the south parte of the Kenites. But Dauid let nether man ner woman come lyuynge vnto Geth, and thoughte: They mighte peraduēture speake a reporte agaynst vs: thus dyd Dauid, and this was his maner as longe as he dwelt in y londe of the Philistynes. And Ioab the sonne of Zeru Ia wète forth with Dauids seruauntes, and they met together by the pole at Gibeon, and these laye on the one syde of the pole, the other on the other syde. And there arose a sore harde battayll the same daye. But Abuer and the inen of Israel were put to flighte of Dauids seruauntes. Thre sonnes of Zeru la were there, Ioab, Abisai t Asahel. $A_{\text {Dauid. }}$ND there was a longe battayll betwene the house of Saul and the house of Dauid. But Dauid wente and increased, and the house of Saul wente and mynished. And vnto Dauid were children borne at Hebron. His firstborne sonne Ammon of Ahinoam the Iesraelitisse: the seconde Chileab of Abigail the wyfe of Nabal of Carmel: the thirde Absalon the sonne of Maacha the doughter of Thalmai kynge of Gessur: the fourth Adonia the somne of Hagith: the fylth Saphatia the sonne of Abital: ${ }^{\circ}$ sixte lethream of Egla Dauids wife. $\star \uparrow$ Reg. 1s. f. and 16.c. whose name was Rispa the doughter of Aia. And Iszboseth sayde vnto Abner: Wherfore liest thou with my fathers concubyne?

Then was Abner very wroth at these wordes of Iszboseth, and sayde: Ami I dogges heade then, that I agaynst Iuda do mercy vnto the house of Saul thy father, and vnto his brethren and kynsfolkes? and haue not delyuered the in to $\dot{y}$ hande of Dauid, and thou layest a trespace to my charge this daye for a womans sake? God do Abner this and that, yf I do not * as the LORDE hath sworne vnto Dauid, that the kyngdome maye be taken fro the house of Saul, and $\hat{y}$ seate of Dauid set vp ouer Israel and Iuda, from Dan vnto Berseba. Then coulde he not answere him one worde agayne, he feared him so.

And Abner sent messaungers vnto Dauid, sayenge: Whose is the londe? And sayde: Make thy couenaunt with me. Beholde, my hande shall be with the, to turne all Israel snto the.

He sayde: Wel, I wyll make a couenaunt with the, but one thynge I desyre of the, that thou se not my face, excepte thou brynge me first Michol Sauls doughter, whan thou commest to se my face. Dauid sent messaungers also vito Iszboseth the sonne of Saul, sayenge: tGene me my wyfe Michol, whom I maried with an hundreth foreszkinnes of the Philistynes. Iszboseth sent, and eaused for to take her from the man $\ddagger$ Palthiel the some of Lais. And hir huszbande wente with her, and wepte behynde her vito Bahurim. Then sayde Abner vinto lim: Turne backe agayne, and go thy waye. Amb he turned backe agayne.

And Abner talked with the Elders in Israel, and sayde: Youre myndes haue bene set afore tyme and longe a goo spon Dauid, that he mighte be kynge ouer you, do it now therfore, for $y$ LORDE hath sayde of Daud: I wil delyuer my people of İsrael by the hāde of Dauid my seruaunt, from the hande of the Philistynes, and from the haude of all their enemies.

Abner spake also before the eares of Ben Iamin, and wente to speake before the eares of Dauid at Hebron all that Israel and the whole house of Ben Iamin was contente withall. Now whan Abner came to Hebron rnto Dauid, and twèty men with him, Dauid made them a feast. And Abner sayde rnto Dauid: I wyll get me vp, and go gather all Israel together to my lorde the kynge, and that they maye make a couenaunt with the, that thou mayest be kynge, at thy soules desyre.

So Dauid let Abner go from him in peace. And beholde, Danid serwaūtes and Ioab came from the men of warre, and broughte a greate spoyle with them. And Abner was not now with Dauid at Hebron, for he had sent him from him, so that he was gone his waye in peace.
But whan Ioab and all the hoost with him was come, it was tolde him that Abner the somne of Ner came to the kynge, and how he had sent him fro him, so that he was gone his waye in peace. Then wente loab in to the kynge, and sayde: What hast thou done? Beholde, Abner eame to the, why hast thou sent him from the, that he is gone his waye? Knowest thou not Abner the sonne of Ner? For he came to the to disceaue the, that he mighte knowe thy outgoynge, and ingoynge, and to spie out all that thou doest. And whan Ioab wente out from Dauid, he sent messañgers after $A$ bner, to fetch him agayne from Boharsira, and Dauid knewe not therof. Now whan Abner came agayne vnto Hebron, loab brought him in to ${ }^{8}$ middes vnder $\stackrel{f}{y}$ gate, to talke with him seeretly, and thrust him there in to $\hat{y}$ bely that he dyed, beeause of his brother Asahels bloude.
Whan Dauid knewe of it therafter, he sayde: I am vngiltye, and so is my kyngdome for euer before the LORDE concernynge the bloude of Abner y some of Ner: but vpon the heade of Ioab fall it, and vpon all his fathers house, and in the house of loab there ceasse not one to haue a renninge yssue and a leprosy, and to go vpon a staffe, and fall thorow the swerde, and to haue searnesse of bred. Thus loab and his brother Abisai slewe Abner, ${ }^{*}$ because he had slayne their brother Asahel in the battaill at Gibeon.

Dauid sayde vito loab and to all $\stackrel{8}{y}$ people y was with him: Rente youre clothes, and gyrde sack cloth aboute you, and make lamentacion for Abner. And the kynge wente after the Bere. And whan they buryed Abner at Hebron, the kynge lifte vp his voyee, and wepte besyde Abners grane, and all the people wepte also.

And the kynge mourned for $\Lambda$ bner, and sayde: Abner is not deed as a foole dyeth. Thy handes were not bounde, thy fete were not vexed with fetters, thou art fallen as a man falleth before wicked vnthriftes. Then all the people bewayled him yet more.

Now whan alt the people came in to eate with Dauid, whyle it was yet hye daye, Dauid sware, and sayde: God do this and that vnto me, yf I taist ether bred or oughte els afore the Sone go downe. And all $\hat{y}$ people knewe it, and it pleased them well all that $y$ kynge dyd in the sighte of all the people. And all the people and all Israel perceaued the same daye, that it came not of the kynge, that Abner the somne of Ner was slayne. And the kynge sayde wnto his seruauntes: Knowe ye not that this daye a prynce and a greate man is fallen in Israel? As for me, 1 am yet but tender and anoynted kynge. But the men the children of Zeru la are to harde for me. The LORDE recompence him that doth euell, acordinge to his wickednes.

the sonne of Nahas, as his father dyd merey ypon me. And so he sent, and comforted him by his seruaūtes ouer his fathers death. Now whan Danids seruauntes came in to the londe of the children of Ammon, the mightie men of the children of Ammon sayde vnto Hanm their lorde: Thynkest thou it is for the honoure of thy father in thy sighte, $\dot{y}^{\frac{1}{y}}$ Dauid hath sent comforters vnto the? Hath he not sent his seruauntes vnto $\dot{f}^{\circ}$ (thynkest thou) to spye and search out the cite and to onerthrowe it?

Then toke Hanun the seruauntes of Dauid, and shoue of the one halue of their beerdes, and cut of the halfe of their garmētes euen by the girdell, and so let them go. Whā this was tolde Dauid, he sent to mete them: for the men were put to greate shame. And the kynge caused to saye vnto them: Abyde at Iericho, tyll youre beerdes be growne, a then come agayne.

Whan the childré of Ammon sawe that they stynked in the sighte of Dauid, they sent and hyred the Sirians of the bouse of Rehob, and the Sirians at Zoba euen twentye thousande fote men, and from the kynge of Maecha a thousande men, and from Istob twolue thousande men. But the Siryaus of Soba, of Rehob, of Istob and of Maecha were alone in the felde.

Now whan Ioab sawe that the battayll was set vpō him before and behynde, he chose of all the best yonge men in Israel, a prepared him selfe agaynst the Syrians. A ND whan ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ yeare came aboute what $\mathfrak{A}$ tyme as y kynges vse to go forth, Dauid sent Ioab ${ }^{a}$ and his seruaūtes with him, and all Israel, to destroye the chitdren of Ammon, and to laye sege moto Rabba: but Dauid abode at lerusalem.

And aboute the euetyde it fortuned that Dauid arose from his restinge place, a wente vp to $y$ toppe of the kynges palace, and from ỳ toppe he sawe a woman * waszshinge hir selfe, and the woman was of a very fayre bewtye. And Dauid sent, and caused to axe what woman it was, and sayde: Is not that Bethseba the doughter of Eliam the wife of Vrias the Hethite? And Dauid sent messañgers, and caused for to fetch her. And whā she was come in vnto him, he laye with her. Neuertheles she hatowed hir selfe from hir vnelennes, and turned agayne vnto hir house. And the womā was with childe, and sent, and caused to tell Dauid and to saye: I am with childe. Dauid sent vnto Ioab (say$\overline{\text { egge : }}$ ) Sende me Vrias y Hethite. And Ioab sent Vrias vnto Dauid. And whan Vrias came to him, Dauid axed him yf it stode well with Ioab, and with the people and with the battayll.

to thy house, and wash thy fete. And whan Vrias wente out of the kynges palace, the kynges gilte folowed him. And Vrias layed him downe to slepe before the kynges palace gate, where all his lordes seruantes laye, r wente not downe in to his house. Whan worde came to Dauid: Vrias is not gone downe in to his house, Danid sayde vito him : Camest thou not ouer the felde? Why wentest thou not downe in to thy house? Vrias sayde mato Dauid: 'The Arke and Israed a Iuda abyde in the tentes: And Ioab my lorde and my lordes seruauntes lye in y fedde, and shal I go in to my house to eate and drynke, and to lye with my wife? As truly as thou lyuest, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, I wyll not do this thinge. Dauid sayde vnto Vria: Abyde here then to daye, tomorow wil I let the go. So Vrias abode at Ierusalem the same daye, and the nexte also. And Dauid ealled him to eate a drynke before him, a made him dronken. And at euen he wente to lye him downe for to slepe spon his couche with his lordes sernauntes, and wente not downe in to his house.

On the morow wrote Dauid a letter vnto Ioab, $\pi$ sent it by Vrias. After this maner wrote he in the letter: Set Vrias in $\hat{y}$ sorest parte of $\dot{y}$ batayll, $\mathbb{x}$ turne you behynde him, y he maye be slayue. Now wha Ioab layed sege to the cite, he set Vrias in $y^{\circ}$ place, where he knewe $\dot{f}$ the mightiest men of Armes were. And whan the men of the cite fell out and foughte agaynst loab, there fell certayne of $\dot{y}$ people of Dauids seruauntes. And Vrias the Hethite dyed also.

Then sent Ioab, and eaused to tell $\dot{y}$ kynge all the matter concernynge the battayll, and comaunded the messaunger, and sayde: Whan thou hast tolde $f$ kynge all the matter concernynge the batayll, and seist that he is wroth, and yf the kynge saye vnto the: Wherfore came ye so nye the cite with the batayll? Knowe ye not how they vse to shate from the wall? *Who smote Abimelech the some of Ierubaall!' Dyd not a womā east a peee of a mylstone vpo him from the wall, so that he dyed at Thebez? Why came ye so nye the wall? Then shalt thou saye: Thy seruaunt Vrias the Hethite is deed also.

The messaunger wente his waye, and came and tokde Dauid all together, wherfore loab had sent him. And the messaunger sayde yuto Dauid: The men preuayded against vs, and fell out vito vs in to $y$ felde: and we were ypon them harde at the dore of $\mathfrak{y}$ porte. And the arehers shot from the wall ypon thy seruauntes, and slewe certayne of the kynges seruauntes: and thy seruaunt Vrias the Hethite is deed also.

Dauid sayde vnto the messaunger: Thus shalt thou saye vnto Ioab: Let not $\frac{t}{y}$ vexe the, for the swerde consumeth now one now another. Go forth with the battayll against the eite, that thou mayest destroye it, and eōforte the men. And whan Vrias wife herde that Vrias was deed, she mourned for hir huszbande. But whā she had made an ende of mournynge, Dauid sent, and caused her be fetehed vnto his palace, and she became his wyfe, and bare him a sonne. AND the LORDE sent Nathan vnto Dauid. Whan he came to him, he tolde him: There were two men in one eite, the one riche, the other poore. The riche man had very many shepe and oxen: but the poore man had nothinge saue one litle shepe, which he lad boughte, and norished it, so that it grewe vp with him and his ehildren together. It ate of his bred, and dranke of his euppe, and slepte in his lappe, and he helde it as a doughter. But whan there eame a straunger snto the riche man, he spared to take of his awne shepe x oxell (to prepare oughte for the straunger that was come vnto him) and toke the poore mans shepe, and prepared it for the man that was come vnto him.

Thé was Dauid wroth with greate displeasure agaynst that man, and sayde vnto Nathan: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, the man that hath done this, is the childe of death. + The shepe also shal he make good foure folde, because he hath done soch a thinge, and not spared it.
'Then sayde Nathan vnto Dauid: Thou art euen the man. Thus sayeth the LORDE the God of Israel: $\ddagger 1$ have anoynted the to be kynge ouer Israel, and delyuered the out of the hande of Saul, and haue geuen the thy lordes house, and his wyues in to thy lappe, and the house of Israel and Iuda haue I geuen the: and yf that be to litle, I wyl
'vet do this and that for the also. Wherfore hast thou then despysed the worde of the LORDE, to do soch euell in his sighte? Vrias the Hethite hast thou slayne with the swerde: His wife hast thou taken to be thy wrfe, but him hast thou slayne with $\dot{y}$ swerde of the children of Ammon.

Now therfore shal not $\mathfrak{y}$ swerde departe from thy house for euer, because thou hast despysed me, and taken the wife of Vrias the Hithite, to be thy wife. Thus sayeth the LORDE: Beholde, *I wyll rayse vp euell of thyne awne house, and wyll take thy wyues before thyne eyes, and wyl gene them vito thy neghboure, so that he shall lye with thy wyues by Some lighte. For thon hast done it secretly, but I wyl do this in the sighte of all Israel, and by Soune lighte.
Then sayde Dauid vnto Nathan +I haue symned vnto the LORDE. Nathan sayde vinto Dauid: So hath the LORDE also taken awaye thy synne, thou shalt not dye. But for so moch as thou thorow this dede hast caused the enemies of the LORDE to blaspheme, $\dot{y}$ sonne that is borne vnto the, shall dye the death. And Nathan wente home. As for the childe which Vrias wife bare vito Dauid, the LORDE smote it, so that it was deedsicke.
And Dauid besoughte God for the childe, and fasted, and wente in, and laie all nighte ypon the earth. Then rose the Elders of his house, and wolde haue taken him vp frō the grounde: neuertheles he wolde not, nether ate he with them. Vpon the seuenth daye $\dot{y}$ childe dyed. And Dauids seruauntes durst not tell him that the childe was deed. For they thoughte: Beholde, whan the childe was yet alyue, we spake vnto him, and he herkened not moto oure voyce, How moch more shall it greue him, yf we saye: Thee childe is deed? And Dauid sawe that his seruauntes made a whisperinge together, and perceaued that the childe was deed, and sayde vnto his seruauntes: Is the childe deed? They sayde: Yee. Then rose Dauid vp from the earth, and waszshed him selfe, and anoynted him, and put on other garmentes, $\mathbb{T}$ wente in to the house of the LORDE, and worshipped.
And whan he came agayne, he commaunded to set bred before him, and ate. Then sayde his seruauntes vnto him: What maner of thinge is this that thou doest? Whan the childe was alyue, thou fastedst and weptest: but now that it is deed, thou stōdest vp and eatest? He sayde: I fasted and wepte for the childe whan it was yet a lyne, for I thoughte: Who knoweth, peraduenture the LORDE maye be gracious vnto me, that the chitde maye lyue. $\ddagger$ But now that it is deed, wherfore shulde I fast? Can I fetch it agayne? I shal go wnto it, but it shall not come agayne vuto me. And whan Dauid had comforted Bethseba his wife, he wente in vito her, and laye with her. \& And she bare a some, whom he ealled Salomon. And the LORDE loued him. And he put him vnder the hāde of Nathan $\dot{y}$ prophet, which called him Iedidia because of the LORDE.

So Ioab foughte agaynst Rabba of $\hat{y}$ children of Ammon, and wanne the kynges cite, $\mathbb{c}$ sent messaügers vnto Dauid, © caused to saye vito him: |II haue foughte against Rabba, and hane wonne the water eite also. So Dauid gathered all 8 y people together, and wente, a foughte agaynst Rabba, and wame it, and toke their kynges crowne frō his heade (which in weight had a talente of golde, and preeious stones) and was set vpon Dauids heade, and very moch spoyle caried he out of the eite. As for the people that was therin, he broughte the forth, and layed them vnder yron sawes and hokes and wedges of yron, and burned the in tyle ouens. Thus dyd he nnto all the cities of the children of Ammon. Then returned Dauid and all the people mito Ierusalem agayne.

thou so leane (thou kynges sonne) from daye to daye? Mayest thou not tell me? Then sayde Ammon into him: I loue Thamar my brother Absaloms sister exceadingly.

Ionadab sayde wnto him: laye the downe rpon thy bedd, and make the sicke. And whan thy father conmeth to loke how thou doest, saye vinto him: Oh let my sister Thamar come, that she maye fede me, and make a meece of meate before me, that I maye se it, o eate it of hir hande. So Ammon layed him downe, and made him sicke. Now what the kynge came in to loke how he dyd, Ammon sayde rato the kynge: Oh let my sister Thamar come, and make me a syppynge or two, and that I maye eate it of hir hande. Then sent Danid for Thamar in to the house, and sayde vito her: Go thy waye to thy brother Ammons house, a make hin a meece of meate. Thamar wente vito hir brother Amons house, but he laye in his bed. And she toke floure, and mixte it, and dighte it before his eyes, and made him a syppynge. But speake vnto the kynge, he shal not withholde me from the.
D. Howbeit he wolde not herken vnto her, and ouercame her, * and forced her, and laye with her. And Ammon hated her exceadingly, so that the hate was greater then the loue was before. And Ammon sayde vnto her: Ip, and get the hence.

She saide vinto him: This euell that thou thrustest me out, is greater then the other, that thou hast done vuto me. Nenertheles he herkened not vnto her, but called his boye [^287]that serued him, and sayde: Put awaye this woman fro me, and loeke the dore after her. And she had a partye garment on: for soch garmentes wayre $\mathfrak{j}$ kynges doughters whyle they were virgins.

And whā his seruaunt had put hir forth, a lockte the dore after her, Thamar strowed aszshes vpon hir heade, and rente the partye garment which she had vpon her, and layed hir hande vpon hir heade, and wente on, and cryed. And hir brother Absalom sayde vnto her: Hath thy brother Ammon bene with the? Now holde thy peace my sister, it is thy brother, and take not the matter so to hert.

So Thamar remayned a wyddowe in her ge brother Absaloms house. And whan kynge Dauid herde of all this, he was very sory. As for Absalom, he spake nether euell ner good to Ammon: but Absalom hated Ammon, because he had forced his sister Thamar.

After two yeares had Absalom shepe clyppers at Baal Hazor, which lyeth by Ephraim. And Absalom called all the kynges children, and came to the kynge, and sayde: Beholde, thy seruaunt hath shepe clyppers, let it please $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ kynge with his seruauntes to go with his seruaunte. But the kynge sayde vnto Absalom: No my sonne, let vs not all go, lest we be to chargeable vnto the.

And he wolde nedes haue had him to go, howbeit he wolde not, but blessed him. Absalom sayde: Shall my brother Ammon go with vs then? The kynge sayde vito him: Wherfore shall he go with the? Then was Absalom so importune vpon him, that he let Ammon and all the kynges childre go with him.

But Absaloun commaunded his yonge men, and sayde: Take hede whan Ammon is mery with wyne (and I saye vnto you: Smyte Ammon, and slaye him) that ye be not afrayed: for I have commaunded you, be stronge, and playe the men. So Absaloms yonge men dyd vito Ammon, as Absalom had commaunded them. Then stode all the kynges children vp, and euery one gat him vp rpō his Mule, and fled. And whyle they were yet on their waye, the rumoure came to kynge Dauid, that Absalom had slayne all the kyinges children, so that not one of them was lefte.

Then stode the kynge vp , and rente his clothes, a layed him downe vpon the earth, and all his seruaūtes that stode aboute him,

Then answered Ionadab $\dot{y}$ sonne of Simea Dauids brother, and sayde: Let not my lorde thynke that all the yonge men the kynges children are deed, but ${ }^{\mathrm{y}} \mathrm{Am}$ mon is deed onely: for Absalom hath kepte it in him selfe sence the daie that he foreed his sister Thamar. Therfore let not my lorde the kynge take it so to hert, that all the kynges children shulde be deed, but that Ammon is deed onely.

As for Absalom, he fled. And the yonge man that kepte the watch, lilte vp his eyes, and loked, and beholde, A greate people came in the waye one after another by the hill syde. Then sayde Ionadab vnto the kynge: Beholde, the kynges ehidren come. Euen as thy sernaunt sayde, so is it happened. And whan he had ended his talkynge, the kynges ehildren came, and lifte yp their voyee, and wepte.

The kynge and alt his sernauntes wepte also very sore. But Absalom fled, and wente vnto Thalmai the some of Ammihud kynge of Gesur. As for Dauid he mourned for his sonne euery daye. Whan Absatom was fled and gone vinto Gesur, he was there thre yeare. And kynge Dauid ceassed from goinge out agaynst Absalom, for he had comforted him selfe ouer Ammon that he was deed.

And wnto Absalom there were borne thre sonnes and one donghter, whose name was Thamar, and she was a woman of a fayre bewtye: So Absalom abode two yeare at Ierusalem, and sawe not the kynges face.

And Absalom sent for Ioab, that he mighte sende him to the kynge. And he wollde not come to him. But he sent the sceonde tyme, yet wolde he not come. Then sayde he unto his seruauntes: Ye knowe Ioabs pece of londe that lyeth by myne, and he hath barlye theron: go youre waye therfore and set fyre rpon it. So Absaloms seruauntes sett fyre vpon loabs pece of loude.

Then Ioab gat him vp, and eame to Absalom in to the house, and sayde vnto hin: Wherfore haue thy seruauntes set fire rpon my pece of londe? Absalō sayde vnto Ioab: Beholde, I sent for the, and caused to saye vuto the: Come hither, that I maye sende the to the kynge, and to saye: Wherfore came I from Gesur? It were better for me that I were there yet. Let me therfore se the kynges face. But yf there be eny trespace in me, then put me to death. And Ioab wente in to the kynge, and tolde him. And he called Absalom, to come in to the kynge, and he worshipped vpon his face to the grounde before the kynge. And the kynge kyssed Absalom.

AND after this it fortuned that Absalom 2 caused to prepare himselfe chearettes and horses, and fyftye men, which were his fote mé. And Absalō gat him vp allwaye early in the mornynge, and stode in the waye by the porte : and whan eny man had a matter which shulde come to the kynge for iudgment, Absalom called mito him and sayde: Of what cite art thou? If he sayde then: thy seruaunt is of one of the trybes of Israel, then sayde Absalom vnto him: Beholde, thy matter is righte and plaine: but there is noman appoynted $\dot{y}$ of the kynge to heare the.

And Absalom sayde: O who setteth me to be iudge in y londe, that enery man which hath a plee or matter to do in $\dot{y}$ lawe, might come to me, that I might helpe him to right. And whan eny man eame to him to do worshippe t to do him obeisaunce, he put forth his hade, and helde him © kyssed him. After this maner dyd Absalom noto all Israel whan they came to the lawe mito the kynge, and so dyd he steale awaye the hert of y men of Israel.

After fortye yeares sayde Absalom vnto the kynge: I wil go and perfourme my vowe at Hebron, which 1 made vinto the LORDE. For thy seruaunt made a rowe, * whan I dwelt at Gesur in Siria, and saide: Whan $\dot{y}$ LORDE bryngeth me agayne to Ierusalem, I shal do a Gods seruyce vinto the LORDE. The kynge sayde vnto him: Go thy waye in peace. And he gat him rp, and wente noto Hebron.

But Absalom had sent out spyes in all the trybes of Israel, sayenge: Whan ye heare the noyse of the trompe, saye: Absalom is made kynge at Hebron. There wente with Absalom two hundreth men called from Ierusalem, but they wente on symply, and knewe not of the matter. Absalom sent also for Achitophel (the Gilonyte) Dauids counceler, out of $\mathfrak{C}$ his cite Gilo. Now whan he did the sacrifice, the conspiracion was mightie and the people ranne together, and multyplied with Absalom.

Then came one which tolde Dauid, and sayde, that the hert of euery man in Israel folowed Absalom. Dauid sayde vnto all his seruauntes that were with him at lerusalem: Yp, let vs fle, for here shall be no escapynge for vs before Absalom.

Make haist that we maye be goynge, lest he ouertake is and catch vs, and dryue some mysfortune vpon vs, and smyte the cyte with the edge of the swerde. Then sayde the kynges seruauntes vato him: Loke what my lorde $y$ kinge choseth, beholde, here are thy seruauntes. And the kynge wente forth on fote with all his housholde. *But ten concubynes lefte he to kepe the house.

And whan the kynge and all the people came forth on fote, they wete farre from home, and all his seruauntes wente by him, and all the Chrethians and Plethians, and all the Gethites (euen sixe hundreth men) which were come on fote from Gath, wente before the kynge.

And the kynge sayde vnto + Ithai $\hat{y}$ Gethite: Why goest thou also with vs? Turne backe, and byde with the kynge, for thou art a straunger: get the hence agayne minto thy place. Thou camest yesterdaye, and to daye thou iuperdest to go with rs: As for me, I wyl go whither I can: turne thou backe agayne, and merey and faithfulnes happen anto thy brethren with the. Ithai answered, and sayde, \# As truly as the LORDE lyueth, and as truly as my lorde the kynge lyueth, loke in what place my lorde the kynge shalbe, (whether it chaunce to life or death) there shal thy seruaunt be also.

Dauid sayde vnto Ithai: Then come, and go with rs. So wente Ithai the Gethite and all his men, and the whole multitude of the children that were with him. And all the lande wepte with loude voyce, and all the -2 Re. 16. U. and 20. a. $\quad+2$ Re. 18. a. $\ddagger$ Ruth 1.c.

And beholde, Sadoc was there also, and all the Leuites that were with them, a they bare $\dot{y}$ Arke of the couenant of God, and set it there. And Abiathar wente sp, tyll all the people came out of the cite. But the kynge sayde vinto Sadoc: Brynge the Arke of God in to the cite agayne. If I shal fynde grace before the LORDE, he shall fetch me agayne, and shall let me se it, and the house of it. But yf he saye thus: I haue no pleasure to $\dot{y}$, beholde, here am I, let him do with me as it pleaseth him.

And the kynge sade vato Sadoc $\mathrm{y}^{8}$ prest: $O$ thou $\S$ Seer, turne agayme to $\mathrm{y}^{\circ}$ cite with peace, and Ahimaas thy sonne with the and Ionathas the sonne of Abiathar: beholde, I wyl tary in the playne of the wyldernes, tyll the message come from you, and tell me. So Sadoc and Abiathar broughte the Arke of God agayne to Ierusalem, and remayned there.

But Dauid wente yp to mount Olyuete and wepte, $九$ his heade was conered. And all the people that was with him, had euery man his heade conered and wente on and wepte. And whan it was tolde Dauid, that Achitophel was in the cofederacy with Absalom, he sayde: LORDE turne thou Achitophels councell to foolishnes.

And whan Dauid came vp to the toppe of $\mathfrak{O}$ the mount, where the rse was to worshippe God, Chusai the Arachite met him with his cote rent, and earth ypon his hearle. And Dauid sayde mito him: If thou go with me, thou shalt be chargeable vnto me: but yf thou goest agayne in to the cite, and sayest minto Absalom: I am thy seruaunt $O$ kyinge euen as I was thy fathers seruaunt, so wyll I now be thy seruaunt, "Then shalt thou brynge Achitophels comneell to naughte. So is Sadoc and Abiathar $y$ prestes with the, and all that thou hearest out of the kynges house, tell it vito Sadoc and Abiathar the prestes. Beholde, their two somes are with the: Ahimaas the some of Sadoe, and Ionathas the sonne of Abiathar, by them mayest thou sende me worde what thou hearest. So Chusai Dauids frende came in to the cite. And Absalom came to Ierusalem.

a ND whan Dauid was gone a lytle by from the toppe of the momet, beholde, Siba the seruant of Mephiboseth met him with a couple of asses sadled, wheron were two hundreth loaues of bred, and an hundreth quantities of rasyns and an hüdreth quantities of fygges, and a bottell of wyne. Then sayde the kynge vuto Siba: What wilt thou do herewith? Siba sayde: 'The asses shalbe for the kynges housholde to ryde vpon, and the loaues and fygges for the yonge men to eate, and the wyne shallbe for them to drynke whan they are weery in the wyldernes. The kynge sayde: Where is thy lordes sonne? Siba sayde vnto the kynge: Beholde, he abydeth at Ierusale, for he saide: To daye shal $y$ house of Israel restore my fathers kigdome vito me. The kynge saide vnto Siba: Beholde, *all that Mephiboseth hath, shalbe thine. Siba sayde with reuerence, Let me finde grace in thy sight my lorde O kynge.

But whan kynge Dauid came to Bahnrim, beholde, there wente out a man of the kynred of the house of Saul, 4 whose name was Semei the some of Gera, which wente forth and $\ddagger$ cursed, and cast stones at Dauid, and at all kynge Danids seruanntes and all the people and all the mightie men were at his righte hande and at his lefte. Absalom sayde vnto Chusai: Is this thy merey vnto thy frende? Why art thou not gone with thy frende? Chusai sayde vnto Absalom: Not so, but loke whom the LORDE ehoseth, and this people, and all the men in Israel, his wyl I be, and byde with him. Secondly, whom shulde I serue? Shulde I not do sernyce before his some? Like as I haue serued in the presence of thy father, so wyll I do seruyce before the also.

And Absalom sayde vnto Aehitophel: Geue vs youre councell what we shal do? And whi they soughte and founde them not, they wente agayne to Ierusalem. And whan they were gone, they clymmed vp out of the well, and wente their waye, and tolde Dauid $\mathfrak{y}$ kynge, and sayde vnto Dauid: Get you vp, and go soone ouer $\hat{y}$ water, for thus and thus hath Achitophel geuen councell agaynst you.

Then Danid gat him vp, and all the people that was with him, and passed ouer lordane tyll it was cleare mornynge. And there was not one, but he wente ouer lordane.

Whan Achitophel sawe that his councell wente not forth, he sadled his asse, gat him vp, and wete home in to his cite and put his house to poynte, and hanged him selfe, and dyed, and was buried in his fathers graue.

And Dauid came to Mahanaim, and Absalom wente ouer Iordane, a all the men of Israel with him. And Absalom had set A masa ouer the hoost in loabs steade. AND Danid mustred the people $\mathrm{y}^{t}$ was with him, and set captaynes ouer the ouer thousandes and ouer hundreds. And sent out of the people one thirde parte vader Abisai the sonne of Zeru Ia Ioabs brother, and one thirde parte moder * Ithai the Gethite. And the kynge sayde wito the people: I wyll go forth with you also. Neuertheles the people sayde: Thou shalt not go forth, for though we fle, or die halfe of vs they shal not regarde vs. For thou art as ten thousande of vs. Therfore is this better that thou mayest helpe rs out of the cite. The kynge sayde: Loke what ye are content withall, that wyl I do. And the kynge stode in the gate, and all the people wente forth by hundreds and by thousandes. And ý kinge cōmaunded Ioab and Abisai, and Ithai, and sayde: Intreate me the yonge man Absalom gently. And all the people herde it, whā the kynge commaunded all the captaynes concernynge Absalom. And whan the people were come forth in to the felde agaynst Israel, the battayll beganne in the wod of Ephraim. And the people of Israel were smitten there before Dauids seruauntes, so that there was a greate slaughter the same daye, of twentye thousande men. And the battaill was scatred abrode there in the londe. And the wod consumed moch more people the same daye, then the swerde consumed.

Ioab sayde: Not so, I wil ypon him before thy face.

Then toke loab thre speares in his hande, and thrust Absalom thorow y hert, while he was yet alyue vpon the Oke. And ten yoge men Ioabs weapenbearers, came aboute him, and smote him to death. Then blewe Ioab the trompe, and broughte the people agayne, that they shulde folowe nomore vpon Israel. For loab wolde fauoure the people. And they toke Absalom, and cast him in the wod in to a greate pytt, and layed a greate heape of stones ypon him. And all Israel fled, euery one anto his tente.

Absalom had set him vp a piler whyle he was yet alyue, which stode in the kynges valley, for he sayde: I haue no sonne, therfore shall this be a remembraunce of my name: and he called the piler after his owne name. And mnto this daie it is yet ealled Absaloms place.

Ahimaas the sonne of Sadoc sayde: Let me rume now, and brynge the kynge worde, that the LORDE hath gotten him righte fro the hande of his enemies. But Ioab sayde : Thou shalt bringe no good tidinges to daie another daye shalt thou brynge him worde, and not to daye, for the kynges sonne is deed. But vnto Chusi sayde Ioab: Go thou thy waye, and tell the kynge what thou hast sene. And Chusi did his obeysaūce vnto Ioab, and ranne. Ahimaas the sonne of Sadoc saide agayne rnto Ioab: What and I ranne also? Ioab sayde: What wilt thou rume ny sonne? Come hither, thou shalt brynge no good tydinges. (He answered:) What and I ranne yet. He saide into him: Reme on thy waye then. So Ahimaas rame the straight waye, and came before Chusi.

As for Dauid, he sat betwene the two gates. And the watchman wente vp to $y$ toppe of the porte vpon the wall, and lifte vp his eyes, and sawe a man renninge alone, and cryed, and tolde the kinge. The kynge sayde: If he be alone, then is there good tydinges in his mouth. And as the same wente and came forth, the watchman sawe another man rennynge, and cryed in the porte and sayde: Beholde, there renneth a man alone. The kinge sayde: The same is a good messaunger also. The watchman sayde: 1 se the rennynge of the first as it were the reunynge of Ahinaas the sonne of Sadoc. And the kynge sayde: He is a good man, and bryngeth good tidinges. Ahimaas cryed, and sayde vato $\dot{y}$ kinge: Peace, and worshipped before the kynge vpon his face to the grounde, and sayde: Praised be the LORDE thy God, which hath geuen ouer y men that lifte vp their handes agaynst my lorde the kynge.

The kynge sayde: Goeth it well with the yonge man Absalom? Ahimas sayde: I sawe a greate vproure, whan Ioab the kynges seruaunt sent me thy seruaunt, and I wote not what it was. The kynge sayde: Go aboute, and stonde here. And he wente aboute and stode there. Beholde, then came Chusi and sayde: I brynge good tydinges my lorde the kynge: The LORDE hath executed righte for the this daye, from the hande of all them that rose vp agaynst the. But the kynge sayde vnto Chusi: Goeth it well with the yonge man Absalom? Chusi sayde: Euen so go it with all the enemyes of my lorde the kynge, and with all them that ryse vp agaynst the to do euell, as it goeth with the yonge man. Then was the kynge soroufull, and wente vp in to the perler vpon the gate, and wepte, and as he wente, he sayde thus: O my sonne Absalō, my sonne, my sonne Absalom, wolde God $\frac{t}{y}$ I shulde dye for the. And beholde, this daye am I come the first amonge all the house of Ioseph, for to go downe to mete my lorde the kynge.

Neuertheles Abisai the sonne of Zeru la answered and sayde: And shulde not Semei dye therfore, seynge he hath cursed y anoynted of $y$ LORDE? But Dauid sayde: $\ddagger$ What have I to do with you ye children of Zeru Ia, that ye wyll become Sathan vnto me this daye? Shulde eny man dye this daye in Israel? And he had not made cleane his fete ner combde his beerde, nether had he waszshed his clothes from the daye that the kynge was gone awaye, vntyll the daye that he came agayne in peace. Now what he eame to Ierusalem for to mete the kynge, the kynge sayde vnto him: Mephiboseth, wherfore wentest thou not with me? And he sayde: My lorde O kynge, my seruañt hath dealte mirighteously with me: for thy seruaunt thoughte: I wil saddell an asse and ryde theron, and go vnto the kynge: for thy seruaunt is lame, and he hath accused thy seruaunt before my lorde $\mathfrak{y}$ kynge. §But my lorde y kynge is an angell of God, and thou mayest do what pleaseth the. For all my fathers house was nothinge, but people of death before my lorde $\mathfrak{y}$ kynge. "And yet hast thou set thy seruaunt amonge them that eate at thy table. What other righteousnes [^291]have l, that I shalde erye eny more vnto the kynge? The kynge sayde vito him: What speakest thou yet more of thy matter? I hane sayde: Thou and siba parte the londe betwene you. Mephiboseth sayde vnto the kynge: Let him take it all, in as moeh as my lorde $\hat{y}$ kynge is come home in peace.

And Barsillai the Gileadite came downe from Roglim, and broughte the kynge ouer lordane, that he mighte coueye him in lordane. And Barsillai was very olde, so good as foure score yeare olde, It the same had prouyded $\hat{y}$ kynge of fode whyle he was at Mahanaim, for he was a very noble man. And the kynge sayde vato Barsillai: Thou shalt go ouer with me, I wyll take care for the with myne awne selfe at Ierusalem. But Barsillai sayde vito the kynge: What haue I yet to lyue, that I shulde go vp to Ierusalem with the kynge? This daye am I foure score yeare olde. How shulde I knowe what is good or euell, or taist what I eate or drynke, or heare what the Musicians do synge? Why shulde thy seruaunt be chargeable first vnto my lorde the kynge? thy seruaunt shall go a litle with the kynge ouer Iordane. Why wil the kynge recompence me after this maner? Let thy seruaunt turne backe agayne, that I maye dye in my cite besyde my father and my mothers graue. Beholde, there is thy seruaunt Chimeam, let him go ouer with my lorde the kynge, and do vito him what pleaseth the.

The kynge sayde: Chimeam shal go ouer with me, and I wyll do for him what liketh the: and what so euer thou desyrest of me, that wyll I do for the also. And whan all $\frac{f}{y}$ people was gone ouer Iordane and the kynge likewyse, the kynge kyssed Barsillai and blessed him, and he turned unto his place. And $\dot{y}$ kynge passed ouer muto Gilgal, and Chimeam wente with him. And all the people of luda broughte the kynge oner, howbeit there was but halfe of the people of Israel there.

And beholde, the came all the men of Israel vnto the kynge, a sayde mito him: Why haue oure brethren the men of Iuda stollen the awaye, and haue conueyed $\hat{y}$ kynge and his honsholde oner Iordane, and all Dauids men with him? Then answered they of Iuda vnto them of Israel: The kynge is of oure nye kynred, why are ye angrie therfore? Thynke

THERE was a famous man of Belial there, whose name was Seba $\dot{y}$ sonne of Bichri, a mà of Iemini, which blewe the trompe, and sayde: *We haue no porcion in Dauid, ner inheritaunce in y some of Isai: let euery one get him to his tent, O lsrael. Then fell euery man in Israel from Dauid, and folowed Seba the somne of Bichri. But the men of luda cleued vnto their kynge from Iordane unto Ierusale. Whan Danid came home to Ierusalem, he toke the ten concubynes ( ${ }^{+}$whom he had lefte to kepe the house) and put them in a holde to be kepte, and made pronysion for them: but he laye not with them, and so were they shut vp vnto their death, and lyued wedowes.

And ẙ kynge sayde vnto Amasa: Call me all the men of Iuda together agaynst the thirde daye, $\pi$ be thou here present also. And Amasa wēte to call Iuda together. And he was slacke to come at $\mathfrak{y}$ tyme which he had appoynted him. And Dauid sayde vnto Abisai: Now shall Seba the sonne of Bichri do vs more harme then Absalom. Take thou thy lordes seruauntes, and folowe upon him, $\frac{\text { t }}{}$ he fynde not some stroge cities for him, and so escape out of oure sighte. Then wente loabs mē forth after him, and the Chrethians and Plethians, and all the mightie me: and they wēte out of Ierusalem to folowe rpon Seba the sonne of Bichri.

But whan they were by the greate stone at Gibeon, Amasa came before them. As for Ioab, he was gyrded aboue his garment which he had on, and vpon it he had a swerde gyrded, which hanged by his thye in the sheeth, and wente easely out and in, and fell frō him. Aud Ioab sayde vnto Amasa: Peace be with the my brother. And Ioab toke Amasa by the beerde with his righte hide, to kysse him. And Amasa toke no hede vinto $\mathfrak{j}$ swerde in loabs hande, and he thrust him therwith in to the bely, $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ his bowels ranne out vpon the earth, and he thrust at him no more. And so he dyed.

Ioab a his brother Abisai folowed ypon Seba y somne of Bichri. And one of loabs seruauntes stode by him, and sayde: What is he this $\frac{t}{y}$ wolde be agaynst Ioab to please Dauid, and to be with Dauid in Ioabs steade? As for Amasa, he laye rolled in the bloude in $\hat{y}$ myddes of the strete. But whā one sawe that all the people stode there still, he remoned Amasa from the strete unto the felde, and cast a clothe vpon him, for so moch as he sawe, that who so euer came by him, stode styil. Now whan he was put out of the waye, euery man wēte after Ioab, to folowe von Seba the sonne of Bichri.

And he wente thorow all $\dot{y}$ trybes of Israel vnto Abel Beth Maacha, and all the best chosen men gathered them selues together, a folowed after him, and came and beseged him at Abel Beth Maacha, and made a banke aboute the cite harde on $\frac{8}{y}$ wall. And all the people that was with Ioab, layed to their ordynaunce, and wolde haue cast downe the wall.

Then cried there a wyse womā out of $\hat{y}$ cite: Heare, heare, saye vnto Ioab that he come hither, I wyl speake with him. And whā he came to her, the woman sayde: Art thou loab? He sayde: Yee. She sayde vnto him: Heare the wordes of thy handmayden. He sayde: I heare. She sayde: The comon sayenge was somtyme: Who so wyll axe, let him axe at Abel, and so came it to a good ende. This is $\dot{y}$ noble and faithfull cite in Israel, and wilt thou destroye the cite and the mother in Israet? Why wilt thou swalowe vp the enheritaunce of the LORDE?
loab answered and sayde: That be farre, that be farre fro me, that I shulde swalowe vp and destroye. The matter is not so, but a certayne man of mount Ephraim named Seba the sonne of Bichri, hath lifte vp him selfe agaynst kynge Dauid, delyuer him onely, and I wyt departe from the cite. The woman sayde vnto Ioab: Beholde, his heade shal be cast vinto the ouer the wall. And the woman came in to all the people with hir wyszdome. ${ }^{\text {a }}$ THERE was a derth also in Dauids tyme thre yeares together. And Dauid soughte the face of $\dot{y}$ LORDE. And the LORDE sayde: Because of Saul and because of that bloudy housholde $+{ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ he slewe the Gibeonites. Then the kynge caused for to call the Gibeonites, and spake vuto them. (As for the Gibeonites, they were not of $\hat{y}$ children of Israel, but a remnaunt of the Amorites: howbeit $\ddagger$ the children of Israel had sworne vnto thee, and Saul soughte for to smyte them in his gelousy, for the childre of Israel and Iuda.) Then sayde Dauid to the Gibeonites: What shal I do vnto you? And where withall shal I make the attonement, that ye maye blesse $\dot{y}$ enheritaunce of $\stackrel{g}{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE? The Gibeonites sayde vnto him: It is not for golde and syluer that we haue to do with Saul and his house, nether haue we oughte to do for to slaye eny mā in Israel. He sayde: What saye ye then, that I shal do vnto you? They sayde vnto y kynge: The man that hath destroyed vs and broughte vs to naughte, shulde we destroye, that nothinge be lefte him in all the coastes of Israel. Let there be geuen vs seuen men of his sonnes, that we maye hange them up into the LORDE at Gibea of Saul the chosen of the LORDE. The kynge sayde: I wyll geue then. Howbeit the kynge spared Mephiboseth $\dot{y}$ sonne of Ionathas $y$ sonne of Saul, because of the ooth of the LORDE $\frac{t}{y}$ was betwene them: § namely, betwene Dauid $\$$ Ionathas the sonne of Saul. But the two sonnes of Rispa $\dot{y}$ doughter of Aia, whom she had borne vnto Saul, Armoni a Mephiboseth, And the fyue sonnes of Michol the doughter of Saul, whom she bare vnto Adriel the sonne of Barsillai the Mahalothite, dyd [^292]the kynge take, and gaue them in to the handes of $\dot{y}$ Gibeonites, which hanged the vp vpo the mount before the LORDE.

So these seuen fell at one tyme, and dyed in the tyme of the first haruest, whan $\dot{y}$ barly haruest begynneth. Then toke Rispa the doughter of Aia a sack cloth, a spred it rpon the rock in the begynnynge of the haruest, tyll the water from the heauen dropped upo them, and suffred not the foules of the heauen to rest on them on the daye tyme, nether the wylde beestes of the felde on the nighte season. And it was tolde Dauid what Rispa the doughter of Aia Sauls concubyne had done.

And Dauid wente and toke the bones of Saul and the bones of lonathas his sonne from $\dot{y}$ citesens at Iabes in Gilead (which they \|had stollen from $\mathfrak{y}$ strete at Bethsan, where y Philistynes had hanged thē, what tyme as the Philistynes had smytten Saul ypon mount Gilboa) and broughte them vp from thence, and gathered them together with the bones of them that were hanged. And the bones of Saul and of his some Ionathas buried they in y londe of Ben lamin, besyde y graue of his father Cis. So after this was God at one with the londe.

But there arose warre agayne of $\stackrel{f}{y}$ Philistynes agaynst Israel. And Dauid wente downe a his seruauntes with him, of foughte agaynst the Philistynes. And Dauid was weery, a Ieszbi of Nob (which was one of the ehildren of Rapha, and the weight of his speare was thre C. weight of brasse, and had a new harnesse vpon him) thoughte to smyte Dauid. Neuertheles Abisai the sonne of Zeru la helped him, a smote the Philistyne to death. Then sware Dauids men vnto him, I sayde: TThou shalt nomore go forth with vs vito the warre, that the lanterne in Israel be not put out.
 Afterwarde there arose yet warre at Nob with the Philistynes. Then Sibechai the Husathite smote Saph, which also was one of the childre of Rapha.

And there arose yet warre at Gob with the Philistynes. Then Elhanan the sonne of Iaere Orgim a Bethleemite smote Goliath the Gethite, which had a speare, whose shaft was like a weeuers lome.

AND Dauid spake the wordes of this songe before the LORDE, what tyme as the LORDE had delyuered him frō the hande of all his enemies, and from the hande of Saul, and he sayde.

The LORDE is my stony rock, a my castell, and my delyuerer.

God is my strength, in him wyl I put my trust: my shylde $\mathbb{c}$ the horne of my saluacion, my defence ic my refuge, my Sauioure, thou shalt helpe me from violent wronge.

* I wil call upon the LORDE with prayse, so shal I be delyuered fro nonne enemies.

For the sorowes of death coppased me, and the brokes of Belial made me afrayed.

The paynes of hell came aboute me, and the snares of death had ouertaken me.
Whā I was in trouble, I called vpō the LORDE, yee euen my God called I ypon, a so he herde my voyce frō his holy temple, a my coplaynte (came) in to his eares.
The earth trembled and quaked, the foundacions of the heauen shoke and moued, because he was wroth.

Smoke wente vp from his nose, and consumynge fyre out of his mouth, coles were kyndled therof.

He bowed the heauens and came downe, and it was darke vnder his fete.

He sat vpon Cherub and dyd flye, and appeared vpon the fethers of the wynde.

He made darknes his pauylion rounde aboute him, thicke water in the cloudes of $\mathfrak{y}$ ayre.

At the brightnesse of him were the fyre coles kyndled.

The LORDE thondered from heauē, and the Hyest put forth his voyce.

He shot his arowes, and scatered them : he lightened, and discomfited them.

The pourynges out of the See were sene, * Psal. 17. a.
and the foundacions of the earth were discouered at the chydinge of the LORDE, a at the breth of the sprete of his wrath.

He sent downe from abouc, and receaued me, and drue me out of many waters.

He delyuered me fro my stronge enemye, from them that hated me, for they were to mightie for me.
They ouertoke me in the tyme of my trouble, but the LORDE was my succoure.
He broughte me forth in to liberty: he delyuered me, because he had a fauoure vito me.
The LORDE shal rewarde me after my righteousnes, and acordinge to the clennes of my handes shal he recompence me.
For I haue kepte $\mathfrak{y}$ waye of the LORDE, $\tau$ haue not bene vn godly agaynst my God.
For I haue an eye vito all his lawes, and haue not put his ordinaunces fro me.
Therfore wil I be perfecte vnto him, and wyl eshue myne awne wickednes.
So shal y LORDE rewarde me after my righteousnes, acordinge to the clēnes of my handes in his eye sighte.

With the holy shalt thou be holy, and with the perfecte thou shalt be perfecte.

With the cleane thou shalt be cleane, and with the frowarde thou shalt be frowarde.

For thou shalt saue the poore oppressed people, and shalt set thine eyes agaynst the proude to brynge them downe.
For thou O LORDE art my lanterne. The LORDE shal lighte my darknesse.
For in y I shal discöfite an hoost of men, © in my God I shal leape ouer the wall.

The waye of God is perfecte: $\hat{y}$ wordes of the LORDE are tryed in the fyre: he is a shylde for all the that put their trust in him.

For where is there a God, excepte $\dot{y}$ LORDE? Or who hath eny strength without oure God?

God hath strēgthed me with power, and made playne a perfecte waye for me.

He hath made my fete like hartes fete, © hath set me vp an hye.

He teacheth my handes to fighte, and bendeth the stele bowe with myne armes.

And thou hast geuen me the shylde of thy health, and with thy louynge correccion shalt thou multiplye me.

Thou hast enlarged my goinge vnder me. and myne ankles haue not slyded.

I wyl folowe spon myne enemies, and destroye thē: and wyl not turne backe agayne, tyll I hane broughte them to naught.

I wil cossume them and thrust them thorow, that they come not vp : they shal fall voder my fete.

Thou hast girded me with strength to $\hat{y}$ battayll, and hast subdued them vnder me $\frac{t}{y}$ rose yp agaynst me.

Thou hast made myne enemies to turne their backes vpo me, that I might destroye them that hate me.

They shal crye, but there shalbe no Sauioure: yee euen vnto the LORDE, but he answereth them not.

I wil beate them as small as the dust of the earth: euen as $\hat{y}$ claye of the stretes wil I make them thynne, and sprede them out abrorle.

But me shalt thou delyuer from the stryuynges of the people, and shalt kepe me to be $\dot{y}$ hearle of the Heythen: A people whom I hane not knowne, shal serue me.
The straunge children haue denyed me: at the hearynge of the eare shal they herke vnto me.

The straunge children are waxen olde, a are shut vp in their presons.

The LORDE lyueth, and blessed be my God, and magnified be the strength of my health.

God seyth that I be auenged, and subdueth the people vnto me.

He bryngeth me out fro myne enemies: a from them $\dot{y}$ ryse vp agaynst me, shalt thou exalte me, and from y cruell man shalt thou delyuer me.

* For this cause wyl I geue thankes vnto the amonge the Heythen, and synge prayses vinto thy name.

Which doth greate health for his kynge, a sheweth mercy vato Dauid his anoynted, and to his sede for euermore.

All this gate Arafna vnto the kynge. And Arafna sayde vnto y kynge: The LORDE thy God make the accepted vnto him. ${ }^{3}$ND whī kinge Dauid was olde a well stryeke in age, he coulde not be warme, though he was conered with clothes. Then sayde his seruauntes vito him : Let vs seke a yonge damsell a virgin for oure lorde the kynge, to stonde before the kynge, and to norish him, a to slepe in his armes, and to warme oure lorde the kynge. And they sought a fayre dasell in all the coastes of Israel, and founde Abisag of Sunem, and brought her vito $\mathfrak{y}$ kynge. And she was a very fayre damsell, and noryshed $\mathfrak{y}$ kynge, and served him. Howbeit the kynge knewe her not.

Adonias $\stackrel{p}{y}$ sonne of Hagith lifte vp himselfe, and sayde: I wyl be kynge. And he prepared him charettes and horsmen, and fyftie men to be renuers on fote before him. And his father reproued hin not therfore, so moch as to saye: Wherfore doest thou so? And he was a man of a very fayre bewtye * and he had begotten him nexte after Absalō. And his matter stode by Ioab y sonne of Zeru Ja and by Abiathar the prest, which helped Adonias. But Sadoc the prest, and Benaia the sonne of Ioiada, and Nathan the prest and Semei and Rei, and Dauids Worthies were not with Adonias.
And whà Adonias offred shepe and oxē, and fat eatell besyde the stone of Soheleth, which lyeth by the twell of Rogel, he called all his brethre the kynges sonnes, and all the men of luda the kynges seruantes. But the prophet Nathan and Benaia, and the Worthies, and his brother Salomon called he not. Then sayde Nathan vnto Bethseba Salomons mother: Hast thou not herde $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ Adonias is kynge, and oure lorde Dauid knoweth not therof? Come now therfore, I wyll geue the councell, that thou mayest delyuer thy soule and the soule of thy sonne Salomon. Come now and go in to kinge Dauid and saye vnto him: Hast not thou my lorde the kynge sworne and sayde unto thy handmayden: Salomon thy some shall be kynge after me, and he shall sytt ypon my seate? Why is then Adonias made kynge? Beholke, while thou art yet there, and talkest with the kynge, I wyll come in after the, and tell forth thy tayle. And Bethseba wente in to the kynge to $\dot{y}$ chamber.

And the kynge was very olde. And Abisag of Sunem serued the kynge. And Bethseba bowed hirselfe, and worshipped the kynge.

The kynge sayde: What wilt thou? She sayde vnto him: My lorde, Thou hast sworne unto thy handmayde by the LORDE thy God: Thy sonne Salomon shall be kynge after me and syt vpon my seate. But now lo, Adonias is kynge, and my lorde the kynge knoweth it not. He hath offred oxen and fat catell, and many shepe, and hath called all the kynges somes, and Abiathar the prest, and loab the chefe captayne. But thy seruaunt Salomon hath he not bydden. Neuertheles thou my lorde art kynge, the eyes of all Israel loke vnto the, that thou shuldest shewe them who shall syt vpon the seate of my lorde the kynge after the. And whā my lorde the kynge slepeth with his fathers then shal I and my sonne Salomon be fayne to be syuners.

But whyle she yet spake to the kynge, the prophet Nathan came, and she tolde y $\dot{\circ}$ kinge: beholde, there is the prophet Nathan. And whan he came in before the kynge, he worshipped the kynge vpon his face to the grounde, and sayde My lorde O kynge, hast thou saide: Adonias shal be kinge after me, a syt vpō my seate? For he is gone downe this daye, and hath offred oxen, and fat catell, a hath called all the kynges sonnes, and the captaynes, and the prest Abiathar. And beholde, they eate and drynke before him, and saye: God saue the kyinge Adonias. But me thy seruaunt, and Sadoe the prest, and Benaia the sonne of loiada, and thy seruaunt Salomon hath he not called. Hath my lorde the kynge commaunded this, and not certifyed his seruauntes who shall sytt vpon the seate of my lorde the kynge after him?

The kinge answered and saide: Call Bethseba vuto me. And she came in before the kinge. And whan she stode before the kynge, the kynge sware and sayde: As truly as the LORDE lyueth (which hath delyuered my soule out of trouble,) I wyl do wnto the this daye, euen as I sware vnto the by the LORDE the God of Israel, so that Salomon thy sonne shalbe kynge after me, and he shal sit rpon my seate in my steade.

Then Bethseba bowed hir selfe with hir face to the grounde, and thanked the kynge and sayde: God saue my lorde kynge Dauid for euermore. And the kynge sayde: Call me the prest Sadoe a the prophet Nathan, and Benaia the some of Ioiada.
玉 And whan they came in before the kynge, the kynge sayde vito them: Take youre lordes seruauntes with you, and set my sonne Salomon vpon my Mule, and cary him downe to Gihon : and let Sadoe y prest and the prophet Nathan, anoynte him there to be kynge ouer Israel, and blowe the trompe, and saye : God saue kynge Salomon, and go ye $v p$ alter him : and whan he commeth, he shal syt ypo my seate, and be kynge in my steade: for 1 haue ordeyned him to be prynce ouer Israel and Iuda. Then answered Benaia the sonne of loiada vnto the kynge, a sayde: Amen. The LORDE God of my lorde the kynge saye thus also. As the LORDE hath bene with my lorde the kynge, so be he with Salomon also, that his seate maye be greater then the seate of my lorde kynge Dauid.

Then wente they downe, the prest Sadoc and the prophet Nathan, and Benaia the sonne of Ioiada, and the Chrethians, a Plethians, a set Salomon vpon kynge Dauids Mule, a broughte him to Gihon. And Sadoc the prest toke the oyle horne out of the Tabernacle, and anoynted Salomon. And they blewe the trompe: And all y people sayde: God saue kynge Salomon.
dF And all the people wente vp after him, and the people pyped with pypes, and was very ioyfull, so that the earth range at the noyse of them. And Adonias herde it, and all they whom he had called, which were with him, and they had new eaten. And whan Ioab herde the noyse of the trompe, he sayde: What meaneth this noyse of the eite and this busynes? But whyle he yet spake, beholde, lonathas the some of Abiathar $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ prest came.

And Adonias sayde: Come in, for thou art a valeaunt man, and bryngest good tydinges. Ionathas answered and sayde vnto Adonias: Alas, oure lorde kynge Dauid hath made Salomon kynge, and hath sent with him Sadoe the prest, and the prophet Nathan, and Benaia the sonne of loiada, and the Chrethians and Plethians, and they haue set him ypon the kynges Mule: and Sadoc ${ }^{\circ}$ prest with the prophet Nathan hath anoynted him kynge at Gihon, and from thece are they gone vp with Salomon also sytteth vpo the kynges seate, and the kynges seruauntes are gone in to wysh good lucke vnto oure lorde kynge Danid, and haue sayde: Thy God make Salomon a better name then thy name is, and make his seate greater then thy seate. And they have wyszshed the kynge good lucke vpon the bed. Morouer ${ }^{\circ}$ kynge hath sayde thus: Praysed be $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE God of Israel, which this daye hath made one to syt vpon my seate, that myne eyes haue sene it.

Then were they afrayed, and gatt them vp all that were called by Adonias, and so they departed euery man his waye. But Adonias was afrayed of Salomon, and gat him vp, and wēte his waye, a toke holde of $\stackrel{f}{y}$ hornes of $\dot{y}$ altare. And it was tolde Salomon: beholde, Adonias feareth kynge Salomō, a beholde, he taketh holde of the hornes of y altare, $\tau$ sayeth: Let kige Salomō sweare unto me this daye, that he shall not slaye his seruaunt with the swerde. Salomon sayde: Yf he wil be an honest man, there shall not one heer fall from him ypon the earth: but yf there be euell founde in him, he shall dye. And kinge Salomō sent, and caused him to be fetched * from the altare. And whan he came, he fell downe before kynge Salomon. But Salomon sayde vnto him: Go thy waye in to thy house.

IISo Danid slepte with his fathers, and was buried in the cite of Dauid. The tyme that Dauid was kynge ouer Israel, is fortie yeare. ${ }^{a}$ Seuen yeares was he kynge at Hebrō and thre and thirtie yeare at Ierusatem. ${ }^{b}$ And Salomon sat ypon the seate of Dauid his father, and his kyngdome was made very sure.
But Adonias the sonne of Hagith came in to Bethseba Salomons mother. And she sayde: is thy commynge peaceable? He spake: Yee, and sayde: I haue somwhat to saye to the. She sayde: Saye on. He sayde: Thou knowest that the kyngdome was myne, and that. all Israet had sett them selues vpon me, that I shulde be kynge, but now is the kyngdome turned, and become my brothers: for he hath it of the LORDE.

Now desyre I one peticion of the, Make not my face ashamed. She sayde vuto him: Saye on. He sayde: Speake rnto kynge Salomon (for the shall not shame thy face) that he mave gene me Abisag to wyfe. Bethseba sayde: Wel, 1 wil speake to the kynge for the.

And Bethseba came in to kyige Salomon to speake with him. And the kynge stode vp, and wente to mete her, and worshipped her, [^296]and sat him downe ypon his seate. And there was a chayre set for the kynges mother, so that she sat at his righte hande. And she sayde: One peticion desyre 1 of the make not my face ashamed. The kynge sayde: Axe O my mother, I wyl not shame thy face. She saide: Let Abisag of Sunem be geuen thy brother Adonias to wyfe.

Then answered kynge Salomon, and saide vnto his mother: Why desyrest thou Abisag of Sunem for Aclonias? Axe the kyngdome for him also, for he is my greater brother,  and hath Abiathar the prest, and Ioab the sonne of Zeru Ia. And the kynge sware by the LORDE, and sayde: God do this and that vnto me, Adonias shall have spoken this agaynst his lyfe. And now as truly as the LORRDE lyueth which hath ordeyned me, and made me to syt vpon the seate of my father Dauid, and hath made me a house ( ${ }^{\dagger}$ acordyinge as he sayde) this daye shal Adonias dye.

And kynge Satomon sent thither by Benaia the sonne of loiada, which smote him that he dyed. And to the prest Abiathar sayde $\mathfrak{y}$ kynge: Go thy waye vato Anathot to thy lonte, for thou art a man of deeth. Neuerthelesse I wyl not slaye the this daye for thou hast borne the Arke of the LORDE God before my father Dauid, and hast suffred also where my father suffired.

Thus Salom ${ }^{-1}$ put forth Abiathar, that he must nomore be the prest of the LORDE, that the worde of the LORDE mighte be fulfilled, $\ddagger \ddagger$ which he spake oner the house of Eli at silo.

And this rumoure came before loab: for Loab eleued moto Adonias, and not wnto Salomon. 'Then fled loab in to the Tabernacle of the LORDE, and toke holde of the hornes of the altare. He sayde: No, I wyl dye here. And Benaia tolde this noto the kynge agayne, and sayde: Thus hath loab spoken, and thus hath he answered me.

[^297]The kinge saide vnto him: Do as he hath spoken, and slaye him, and bury him, that thou mayest put fro me and my fathers house the bloude which Ioab hath shed with out a cause, and that the LORDE maye recompence him his bloude vpon his heade, beeause he smote two men, which were more righteous and better then he, and slewe them with $y$ swerde that my father Dauid knewe not of: namely, * Abner $\dot{y}$ somne of Ner the chefe captaine ouer Israel, 6 Amasa the sonne of Iether $\hat{y}$ chefe captaine ouer Iuda ${ }^{a}{ }^{t} y$ their bloude maye be recompensed vpō ${ }_{y}^{\circ}$ hearle of loab and of his sede for euer: but Dauid and his sede, his house and his seate haue peace for enermore of the LORDE.

Geber the sonne of Vri in the londe of Gilead, in the londe of Sihon kynge of the Amorites, and of Og the kynge in Basan. One officer was in the same londe. As for luda and Israel, they were in nombre as the sonde of the see, and ate and dronke, and were mery. *Thus was Salomē lorde ouer all the kyngdomes (from the water of the londe of the Philistynes, vnto the border of Egipte) whieh broughte him giftes, and serued him as longe as he lyued.

And Salomon had daylie to his vytayles thirtye quarters of fyne meel, thre score quarters of other meel, ten fat oxen, and twēty small catell, and an hundreth shepe, beside hartes and Roes, and wilde goates, and fat capons, and foules. For he had the lordshippe of all the londe on this syde the water, frō Tiphsa vito Gasa, and ouer all $y$ kynges on this syde $\dot{y}$ water: a had peace of all his subiectes rounde aboute, so that Iuda and Israel dwelt safe, euery one vnder his vyne, and vnder his figge tre, from Dan vnto Berseba, as longe as Salomon lyued.
And Salomō had fortye thousande cart horses, and twolue thousande horsmen. And the officers prouyded the kynge Salomon with vytayles: and what soeuer belonged to the kynges table, that brought euery man in his moneth, and myssed not: Barlye also a strave for the horses and coursers, © broughte them vnto the place where $y$ kynge was, euery one atter his charge.
$\dagger$ And God gaue Salomon maruelous greate wyszdome and vnderstondinge, and a large hert, as the sonde that lyeth vpon $\hat{y}$ See shore : so that the wyszdome of Salomon was greater then the wyszdome of all the children towarde the south and of all $\hat{y}$ Egipeians. And he was wyser then all men, yee wyser then Ethan the Esrahite, Heman, Chalcal, and Darda, the sonnes of Mahol: and had a greate name amonge all the Heythè on euery syde. And he spake thre thousande $\ddagger$ prouerbes, a his ssonges were a thousande a fyue. And he spake of trees, from $\hat{y}$ Ceder of Libanus nuto the Isope $y \dot{y}$ groweth out of $\hat{y}$, wall: he talked also of eatell, of foules, of wormes, of fiszshes. And there came of all

AND Hiram $\hat{y}$ kynge of Tyre sent his a seruauntes vito Salomon, for he had herde, $\dot{y}$ they had anoynted him kynge in his fathers steade : for Hiram |lloued Dauid as loge as he lyued. "And Salomon sent vnto Ifiram, sayenge:  Thou knowest that my father might not buylde an house vnto the name of the LORDE his God, because of the warre that was aboute him, vntyll the LORDE delyuered them vnder the soles of his fete: But now hath the LORDE my God geuen me rest on euery syde, so that there is no aduersary ner cuell hynderaunce: Beholde, 1 am therfore aduysed to buylde an house vuto the name of the LORDE my God, acordinge as the LORDE spake vnto Dauid my father, and sayde: ${ }^{+t}$ 'Thy sonne, whom I shal set vpon thy seate in thy steade, shal buylde an house vito my name. Whan Hiram herde the wordes of Salomon, he was very glad, and sayde: Praysed be the LORDE this daye, which hath geuen Dauid a wyse some ouer this greate people. And Hiran sent vnto Salomon, sayenge: I haue herde what thou hast sent vnto me: I wyl do acordinge vnto all thy desyre with Ceders and Pyne trees. My seruautes shall brynge them downe from Libanus muto $\mathfrak{y}$ See, and 1 wyl make them to flote vp $\overline{0}$ the See, vito the place whieh thou shalt shewe me, and there wyl I cause them to aryue, $\pi$ thou shalt make the to be fetched. IN the foure hundreth and foure score yeare after the ${ }^{a}$ departinge of the children of Israel out of the londe of Egipte, in the fourth yeare of the raigne of Salomon ouer Israel, in the moneth Sif ( y is the seconde moneth) was the house buylded vato the LORDE. This house that kynge Salomon buylded into y LORDE, was thre score cubytes loge, twenty cubytes brode, $\pi$ thirtie cubites hye. And he buylded a + Porche before the temple of twentye cubytes longe after the bredth of the house, a ten cubites brode before the house. And in y house he made wyndowes, which might be opened and shut with Iyddes.

And rounde aboute by the wall of y house he buylded a compase, so $\frac{t}{y}$ it wente both aboute the temple and the quere, and made his outwarde wall rounde aboute. The nether most stacion was fyue cubytes wyde, and $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ myddest sixe cubites wyde, and the thirde senen cubites wyde. For he layed balkes rounde abonte the house, that they touched not $y$ wall of the honse.

And whan $\mathfrak{y}$ house was buylded, it was

- 3 Re. 4. a. and 12.c. 2 Par. 3. a. Act. 7. f. + Ioh. 10. c. Act. 3. b. and 5. b.
|buylded of whole and outbroken stones, so $\stackrel{t}{y}$ there was herde nether hammer ner axe, ner eny other instrmment of yron, whan the house was a buyldinge.

But on the righte syde of the myddes of the house there was a dore, so $\frac{t}{y}$ they might go up to the myddest stacion by a turne grese, a from the myddest stacion vnto $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ thirde. Thus buylded he the house, a fymished it, a syled $y$ house both aboue $\pi$ by the walles with Ceder wodd. He buylded a galery also aboue vpon the whole house fyue cubytes hye, and couered the house with Ceder tymber.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Salomon, $\pi$ sayde: Let this be the house $\frac{t}{y}$ thou buyldest. If thou shalt walke in myne ordinaunces, $\pi$ do acordinge to my lawes, a kepe all my comaundementes, to walke therin, then wyl I stablyszshe my worde with $\dot{y},(\ddagger$ as I sayde vuto Dauid thy father) a wyll dwell amonge the childree of Israel, and wil not forsake my people of Israel.

Thus Salomon buylded the house, a fynished it, a buytded the walles on the insyde with Ceder tymber, from the gromnde of $\mathfrak{y}$ house vato the rofe, and syled it with tymbre on the ynsyde, and ouerlayed the floore of $\hat{y}$ house with bordes of Pyne tre.

And behynde in the house he buylded a wall of Ceder tymber twentye cubytes longe, from the floore vito the rofe. And there on the ynsyde buylded he the quere for the most holy. But the house of the temple before the quere was fortye cubites longe: on the ynsyde was the whole house of Ceder with throwne knoppes and floures, so that there was no stone sene. As for the quere, he prepared it on the ynsyde of the house, that the Arke of the conenaunt of the LORDE might be set therin. And before the quere (which was twentye cubites longe, twentye cubytes brode, and twentye cubytes hye, and ouerlayed with pure golde) he syled the altare with Ceder.

And Salomon ouertayed the house on $f$ ynsyde with pure golde, $i$ shot barres of golde before the quere, which he had onerlayed with golde, so that $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ whole honse was layed oner with golde. And all the altare also before $\dot{y}$ quere ouerlayed he with golde.
& He made also in the quere two Cherubins
ten cubites hye of Olyue tre. One wynge of ether of the Cherubs had fyue cubytes, so that from the edge of his one wynge to the edge of his other wynge there were ten cubytes. Euen so had the other Cherub ten cubites also, and both the Cherubs were of one measure and of one quantitie so $\dot{y}$ ether Cherub was ten cubites hyc. And he put the Cherubins within in the house. And the Cherubins spred forth their wynges, so that the wynge of the one touched the one wall, and the other Cherubs wynge touched the other wall. But in the myddes of $\hat{y}$ house the one wyinge touched another. And he onerlayed the Cherubins with golde.

And on all the walles of the house rounde aboute, he caused to make carued worke, with carued Cherubins, palme trees, and floures. And the pauement of the house onerlayed he also with goldē plates. And at the intraunce of the quere he made two dores of olyue tre with fyue squared postes, and caused carued worke to be made therof with Cherubins, palme trees and floures, a ouerlayed them with plates of golde. So made he also at the intraunce of the temple, forre squared postes of Olyue tre, and two dores of l'yne tre (so that ether dore had two syde dores one hāginge to another) and made carued worke therof, palme trees and floures, right as it was appoynted.

And he buylded a courte also within with thre rowes of fre stone, and with one rowe of playne Ceder tymber.

In the fourth yeare in the moneth Sif, was the foundacion of the LORDES house layed: and in the eleuenth yeare in the moneth Bul (that is the eight moneth) was the house fynished as it shulde be, so that they were seuen yeare a buyldinge of it.

${ }^{2}$ BUT Salomon was a buyldinge his awne house thirtenc yeare, a fynished it, namely, he buylded an house of the wodd of Libanus, an hundreth cubites longe, fiftye cubites wyde, a thirtic cubites hye, fouresquared with rowes of pilers, and with carued Ceders. And the rofe aboue syled he also with Ceder wodd ypon the fyue $\pi$ fortie pilers, for one rowe had fyftene pilers, so ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{y}}$ there stode euer thre pilers one right ouer agaynst another: so that cuery space betwixte the pilers was one ouer agaynst another foure squared with the pilers.

And he made a porche with pilers which was fiftye cubites longe, and thirtie cubites brode, a yet a porche before it with pilers a with a greate poste. He made a porche also vnto y kynges seate (wheriu y iudgment was kepte) and made it to be the porche of iudgment, and syled it with Ceder from the pauement unto the pauement agayne, and his owne house wherin he dwelt, in y back courte made betwene $\dot{y}$ house and the porche like the other. And like vato the porche made he a house for Pharaos doughter, * whom Salomon had taken to wife.

All these were costly stone hewen after $\dot{y}$ measure, cut with sawes on cuery syde, from the grounde unto the rofe: and without the greate courte also. As for the foundacions, they were costly and greate stones, ten and eighte cubites greate : and costly fre stones theron acordinge to y measure, and Ceders. But the greate courte rounde aboute had thre rowes of fre stone, $\mathbb{c}$ one rowe of playne Ce ders: Euen so also the courte by y house of the LORDE within, and the porch by the house.

And kynge Salomon sent to fetch one + Hiram of Tyre a wedowes sonne, of the trybe of Nephtali, and his father had bene a man of Tyre, $\ddagger$ which was a connynge mā in metall, full of wyszdome, vuderstondinge and knowlege to worke all maner of metall worke. Whan he came to kynge Salomon, he made all his worke, $\S$ and made two brasen pilers, ether of them eightene cubites hye: and a threde of xij. cubites was the measure aboute both $\hat{y}$ pilers: and he made two knoppes of $\mathbb{C}$ brasse molten, to set abouc spon the pilers: and enery knoppe was fyue cubytes hye : and on euery knoppe aboue rpon $\hat{y}$ pilers seue wrythen ropes like cheynes. And vpon euery knoppe he made two rowes of pomgranates rounde ahoute on one rope, wherwith y knoppe was couered. And the knoppes were like roses before ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ porche foure cubites greate. And the pongranates in the rowes rounde aboute were two hudreth aboue and beneth ypon the rope, which wete rounde aboute the thicknes of the knoppe, on euery knoppe ypon both the pilers. And set vp the pilers before the porche of the temple. And that which he set on the right hande, called he Iachin : and that which he set on the lefte hande, called he Boos. And so stode it aboue vpon the pilers enen like roses. Thus was the worke of $y$ pilers fynished.

And he made a molten lauer ten cubytes wyde from the one syde to the other rounde aboute, and fyue cubites hye, and a threde of thirtie cubites loge was $\mathfrak{y}$ measure rounde aboute: and aboute the same lauer that was ten cubites wyde, there wente knoppes on the edge therof rounde aboute the lauer. Two rowes were there of the knoppes molten with the lauer.

And it stode vpon twolue bullockes, wherof thre were turned towarde the north, thre towarde the west, thre towarde the south, and thre towarde the east, and the lauer abone theron, so that all their hynder partes were within vader the lauer: wherof the thicknesse was an handbreth: and the edge of it was like the edge of a cuppe, and as a floured rose, and it conteyned two thousande *Battes.

And he made ten brasen seates, euery one foure cubites longe and brode, and thre eubites hye. The seate was made so, that it had sydes betwene the ledges. And on the sydes betwene the ledges there were lyons, bullockes and Cherubins. And on y ledges which were aboue and beneth the lyons and bullockes, were the sydes made so, that they were set downwardes. And euery stole had foure brasen wheles with brasen axeltrees. And vpon the fonre comers there were proppes molten, euery one ouer agaynst another, vnderset vuto the kettell.

And the soket vpon the stole was a cubyte hye and rounde, a cubyte and an halfe wyde : and on the soket there were knoppes in foldes, which were foure squared a not rounde. The foure wheles stode beneth by the sydes, a the axeltrees of the wheles were harde on $\frac{8}{y}$ seate. Euery whele was a cubite and a halfe hye, and they were wheles like cart wheles. And their axeltrees, spokes, nales, at shaftes were all molten. And the foure proppes vpo the foure corners of euery seate were harde on the seate.

And on the soket aboue vpon the seate a cubste and an halfe rounde aboute, there were ledges aml sydes harde on the seate. And on the plat of the same sydes and ledges, he caused to carue Cherubins, lyons and palme trees, one by another rounde aboute theron. After this maner made he ten molte seates, one maner of measure a widenes was in all.

And he made ten copper kettels, so that one kettell cōteyned fortye Battes, and was foure cubites greate, and vpon euery seate was a kettell. Aud fyue seates set he on the righte syde of the house, and the other fyue on the lefte syde. But the lauer set he before on the righte hande towarde the south.

And Hiram made pottes also and shouels and basens, $\tau$ so fynished he all the worke, that kynge Salomon caused to be made in the house of the LORDE: namely $f$ two pilers, and the rounde knoppes aboue vpon the two pilers, and the two wrythen ropes to couer the two rounde knoppes vpon the pilers. And the foure hīdreth pomgranates on the two wrythen ropes, euer two rowes of pomgranates vnto enery rope, to couer the two rounde knoppes vpon the pilers. And the ten seates, and ten kettels theron, and the lauer, and twolue bullockes vnder y lauer. And the pottes, shonels and basens. And all the ornamentes which Hiram made vnto kynge Salomon for the house of the LORDE, were of pure metall. In the countre by Iordane, eaused the kynge them to be molten in thicke earth, betwene Sucoth and Zarthan. And Salomon let all the apparell be vnweyed, because the metall was so moch.

Moroner Salomon made all the apperell that belonged vnto the house of the LORDE: namely a golden altare, a golden table that the shewbred laye on, fyne candelstickes on the righte hande, and fyue candelstickes on the lefte (before the quere) of pure golde, with floures, lampes and snoffers of golde therto, flat peces, charges, basens, spones and censours of pure golde. And the hokes of y dores on the insyde of the house in the most holy, and in the dores of the house of the téple of the LORDE were of golde.

Thus all the worke that kynge Salomon made in $\hat{y}$ house of the LORDE, was fynisshed. + And Salomon brought in that his father Dauid had sanctified, of syluer and golde and ornamentes, and layed it amonge the treasures of the house of the LORDE.

THEN gathered kynge Salomon all $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ Elders in Israel together, all the rulers of the trybes and prynces of the fathers amonge the children of Israel, vnto Ierusalem, to brynge vp the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE, *out of the cite of Dauid, that is Sion. And there resorted vnto kynge Salomon all the men in Israel, at the feast in the moneth Ethanim, that is $\dot{y}$ seuenth moneth. And whan all $\mathrm{f}_{\mathrm{y}}$ Elders of Israel came, the prestes toke the Arke of the LORDE, and broughte it vp , and the Tabernacle of witnesse, and all the ornamentes of the Sanctuary that were in the Tabernacle. [^301]in heauen, * from the seate of thy dwellynge, and execute iudgment for them, and be mercifull unto thy people that have synned agaynst the, and vnto all their trespaces, wherwith they haue transgressed agaynst the, tand graunte the mercy in the sighte of them which led them awaye presonners, that their enemyes maye be mercyfull vnto them: for they are thy people, and thyne enheritaunce, whom thou broughtest out of Egipte, from the yron fornace: that thine eyes maye be open vnto the peticion of thy seruaunt, and of thy people of lsrael, that thou maiest heare them in all thinges for the which they shall eall rpon the $\ddagger$ (for thou O LORDE LORDE) hast sundered them out to be an inheritannee vito thy selfe, from amoge all the nacions vpon earth, acordinge as thou saydest by Moses thy seruaunt, whan thou broughtest oure fathers out of Egipte.
§And whī Salomon had ended all this prayer and peticion before the LORDE, he rose up from the altare of the LORDE, and lefte of from knelynge and holdynge out of handes towarde heauen, and stode and blessed all the congregacion of Israel with loude voyce, and sayde: Praysed be the LORDE which hath geuen rest vnto his people, acordinge as he sayde. There hath not one fayled of all his good wordes, which he spake by his sermaunt Moses. The LORDE oure God be with vs, as he hath bene with oure fathers, and forsake vs not, nether withdrawe his hande from vs, but bowe oure hertes vnto him, that we maye walke in all his wayes, and kepe his commaundementes, ordinaunces and lawes, which he commaunded oure fathers. And these wordes wherwith I haue made my peticion before the LORDE, come nye vito the LORDE oure God daye and nighte, that he maye execute iudgment for his seruaunt and for his people of Israel, euery one at his tyme: that all nacions vpon earth maye knowe, that the LORDE is God, $\pi$ that there is none other. And let youre hert be perfecte with the LORDE oure God, to walke in his statutes, and to kepe his commaundementes, as it is this daye.

And the kynge with all Israel his people offred sacrifice before the LORDE. And Salomon offred deed offerynges (which he offred vito the LORDE) two and twenty thousande oxen, and an hundreth a twenty thousande shepe. So the kynge and all the children of Israel dedicated the house of the LORDE. The same daye dyd the kynge dedicate the myddemost courte, which was before the house of the LORDE: that he mighte there perfourme the burntofferynges, meatofferynges, and the fat of the deedofferynges: for the brasen altare that stode before $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE, was to litle for the burntofferynges, meatofferynges, and for the fat of the deedofferynges.

- Amos 9. b. $\quad$ † 1 Esd. 1. a. $\ddagger$ Exo. 19. a.

And at the same tyme made Salomon a solempme feast, and all Israel a greate congregacion with him, from the border of Hemath vito the ryuer of Egipte, before the LORDE oure God, seuen dayes, and yet seuen dayes, that were fourtene daies. And on the eight daye he let the people go. And they blessed the kynge, and wente vnto their tentes reioysinge and with a mery hert, because of all the good that the LORDE had done vnto Dauid his seruaunt, a to his people of Israel.

Tbe ir. Chapter.

A ND whan Salomon had fynished ${ }^{a}$ f buyldinge of the house of the LORDE, and the kynges house, and all that his desyre and pleasure was to make, f̂ LORDE appeared vnto him the seconde tyme, " euen as he appeared vnto him at Gibeon. And the LORDE sayde vnto him: I haue herde thy prayer and peticion, that thou hast made before me, and haue sanctified this house which thou hast buylded, that I maye set my name there for cuer : and mone eyes and my hert shalbe there allwaye. And yf thou walke before me (as thy father Dauid walked) with a perfecte and a truc hert, so that thou do all that I haue commaunded the, and kepe myne ordinaunces and lawes, then wyll I stablish the seate of thy kyngdome oucr Israel for euer, acordinge as 1 promysed thy father Dauid, and sayde: "Thou shalt not wante a man from the seate of Israel.

But yf ye turne batk fro me, ye and youre childre, and kepe not my commaundementes and ordinaunces whieh I haue layed before you, but go and serue other goddes, and worshipe them, then wyll I rote Israel out of the londe that I hauc geuen them. ${ }^{* *}$ And the [^302]house that I haue halowed vito my name, wyll I put awaye fro my face. And Israel shall be come a byworde and fabell amōge all nacions, and so shal this hye house : so that euery one ỳ goeth by, shall be astonyed, and make an hyssynge, and saye: * Wherfore hath the LORDE done thus vito this londe and to this house? Then shal it be answered: Because they forsoke $\hat{y}$ LORDE their God, (which brought their fathers out of the londe of Egipte) and haue receaued other goddes, and worshipped them, and serued them. Therfore hath $\hat{y}$ LORDE brought all this euell vpon them.

Now whan the twentye yeares were ended, ${ }^{a}$ wherin Salomon buylded the two houses, the LORDES honse and the kynges house, ${ }^{\dagger}$ where vnto Hiran the kynge of Tyre brought Salomō Ceder trees © Pyne trees, and golde after all his desyre, then gaue kynge Salomon vnto Hiram twentye cities in the countre of Galile. And Hiran departed from Tyre to ryset the cities which Salomon had geuen him, © they pleased him not, and he sayde: What maner of cities are these (my brother) that thou hast gene me? And he called them the londe of Cabul vuto this daye. And Hiram sent vnto the kynge, sixe score hundreth weight of Golde. And the same is the summe of the taxe, that kynge Salomon raysed to the buyldinge of the house of the LORDE, and his awne house, a Millo, and the walles of Ierusalem, and Hasor, and Megiddo, and Gaser.

For Pharao y kynge of Egipte came vp, and wāne Gaser, « brent it with fyre, a slewe the Cananites $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ dwelt in the cite, $\mathbb{I}$ gaue it for a gifte unto his doughter Salomōs wife. So Salomon buylded Gaser, © the lower Bethoron, and Baelath and Thamar, in $\dot{y}$ wyldernes, in the londe, $\mathbb{T}$ all the cities of the corne houses that Salomon had, and all the eities of the charettes, © all the cities of the horsmen, and what it pleased him to buylde at lerusalem, in Libanns, © in euery countre of his domynion.

And all the remnaunt of the people of the Amorytes, Hethites, Pheresites, Heuites and Iebusites, which were not of the children of Israel, their children which they lefte behynde them in the londe (whom the children of $\ddagger$ But of the children of Israel he made no bondmen, but let them be men of warre, and his seruauntes, and prynces, and knightes, and oner his charettes and horsmē. And the officers which were ouer Salomons busynesse, were fyue hundreth and fyftye, which ruled the people, and perfourmed the worke.

And Pharaos doughter wente p from the cite of Dauid, in to hir house swhich he had buylded for her. "IThen buylded he Millo likewyse. And thre tymes in the yeare dyd Salomon offre burntofferynges and deed offerynges apou the altare 9 that he had buylded vnto the LORDE, and burnt incense vpon it before the LORDE, and so was the house ended and fynished.
${ }^{* *}$ And Salomon made shippes also at Ezeon Geber, which lyeth by Eloth besyde the Reed See shore in y londe of the Edomites. And Hiram sent his seruauntes by shippe, which were shipmen, and had experience of the See, with Salomons seruauntes; and they came vnto ${ }^{++}$Ophir, and fetched from thence one a twenty score hundreth weight of golde, and brought it vnto Salomon.

AND whan kynge Salomons fame of the name of the LORDE came to the eares of the ${ }^{5}$ Quene of riche Arabia, she came to proue him with darke sentences. And she came to Ierusalem with a maruelous greate trayne, with camels which bare spyces, and moch golde, and preeious stones. And whan she came in to kynge Salomon, she spake vnto him all that was in hir hert. And Salomon tolde her euergthinge, and the kynge had nothinge in secrete, but he tolde it her. But whan the Quene of riche Arabia save all the wyszdome of Salomon, and the house that he had buylded, and the meates of his table, and the dwellinges of his seruauntes, a the offyces of his ministers, and their garmentes, and his butlers and the burntofferynges which he offred in the house of the LORDE, she wondred exceadingly, and coulde no longer refrayne, but sayde vato the kynge: It is true that I haue herde in my londe of thy behauoure and of thy wyszdome.
 t+ Iere. 10. b. ${ }^{\circ} 2$ Par. 9. a. Mat.12. d.

W And I wolde not beleue it, tyll I came and sawe it with myne eyes: and beholde, the halfe hath not bene tolde me.

Thou hast more wyszdome and good, the the fame is that I haue herde. Happye are thy people and thy seruauntes, that allwaie stonde before the, and heare thy wyszdome. Praysed be the LORDE thy God, which had soch a pleasure vnto the, that he set the rpon the seate of Israel : because he hath allwaye loued Israel, and hath set the to be kynge, that thou shuldest mantayne iustyce and equyte.

And she gaue the kynge syxe score hundreth weighte of golde, and very moch spyce, and precious stones. There came nener so moch spyce thyther, as the Quene of riche Arabia gaue vito kynge Salomon. And Hirams shippes, *which caried golde out of Ophir, broughte maruelous moch costly tymber and precious stones from Ophir. And of that costly tymber the kynge caused to make pilers in the house of the LORDE, and in $\frac{f}{y}$ kinges house, and harpes and Psalteries for the Musicians. There came nomore soch costly tymber, nether was it sene vnto this daye. And kynge Salomon gaue the quene of riche Arabia, all that she desyred and axed, besydes that which he gaue her of a frye hande. And she returned, and departed in to hir lande with hir seruauntes.

The golde that came to Salomon in one yeare, was nyne and thyrtie score hundreth weighte, besydes that which came of chapmen, marchanntes and Apotecaries, and of the nexte kynges, and of the mightie men in the londe. And kynge Salomon caused to make two hundreth speares of beaten golde, sixe hundreth peces of golde put he to euery speare: and thre hundreth shyldes of $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ best golde, euen thre pounde of golde vpon euery shylde. And the kynge put them in the thouse of the wod of Libanus.

And the kynge made a greate seate of Yuery, and ouerlayed it with ${ }^{8}$ most precions golde. And the seate had sixe steppes, and $\dot{y}$ heade of the seate was roude behynde. And there were two postes to leane vpó on both the sydes of the seate, and two lyons stode vpon the leanynge postes, and twolue lyons stode vpon the sixe steppes on both the sydes. Soch one hath not bene made in eny kyngdome. All kynge Salomōs drynkynge vessels [^304]were of golde, and all the vessels in the house of $\dot{y}$ wod of Libanus were of pure golde also: for syluer was not regarded in Salomons tyme. For the kynges Seeshippe $\frac{t}{y}$ sayled von the See with $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ shippe of Hiram, came once in thre yeare, and broughte golde, syluer, Yuery, Apes, and Pecockes.

$\ddagger$ Thus was kynge Salomon greater in riches and wyszdome, then all the kynges vp $\bar{o}$ earth: And all the worlde desyred to se Salomon, that they mighte heare the wyszdome which God gaue him in his hert. And they broughte him yearly euery man his present, vessels of syluer and golde, rayment and harnesse, spyces, horses and Mules. And Salomon broughte charettes and horsmen together, so that he had a thousande and foure hundreth charettes, and twolue thousande horsmen: and those he put in y charet cities, and with the kynge at Ierusalem.

And the kynge broughte it to passe, that there was as moch syluer at Ierusalē as stones: and as many Ceders as there were wylde figge trees in the valleys. And Salomōs horses were broughte out of Egipte, and frō Keua: for the kynges marchauntes fetched them from Keua for money. And a charet came vp out of Egipte for sixe hidreth Sycles of Syluer, and an horse for an hüdreth and fyftye. Thus were they brought also vato all the kynges of the Hethites and to the kynges of Siria by their handes.

BUT kynge Salomon loued many outlandish wemen, $\S$ Pharaos doughter, and wemen of Moab, of Ammō, of Edom, of Sidon, and of Heth, euen of those nacions, that the LORDE spake of vnto the children of Israel: ${ }^{a}$ Go not ye vito them, and let not them come vnto you: they shal surely bowe youre hertes after their goddes: Vnto these dyd Salomon enclyne with affeccion. And he had seuen hundreth wemen to wyues, and thre hundreth concubynes, and his wyues turned his hert asyde. And whan he was now olde, his wyues bowed his hert after straunge goddes, so that his hert was not whole with the LORDE his God, as was the hert of Dauid his father.

So Salomon walked after Astaroth the god of the Sidonians, and after Malcom the fabhominacion of the Ammonites. And Salomon dyd $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{t}}$ which displeased the LORDE, and folowed not $\hat{y}$ LORDE to $\dot{y}$ vttemost as dyd his father Dauid. The buylded Satomo an hie place vnto Chamos the abhominacio of $y$ Moabites (ypon the mount that lyeth before Ierusalē) and vinto Moloch the abhominacion of the Ammonites.

Thus dyd Salomon for all his outladish wyues, which brent inceuse, and offred wnto their goddes. But the LORDE was wroth at Salomon, because his hert was turned asyde from $\hat{y}$ LORDE God of lsrael, * which had two tymes appeared vuto him, and comaunded him, that he shulde not walke after other goddes: and yet kepte he not that the LORDE commaunded him. Therfore sayde the LORDE vnto Salomon: For so moch as this is done with the, and hast not kepte my couenaunt and myne ordinaunces, which 1 commaunded the, therfore wyll I also plucke thy kyngdome from the, and geue it vnto thy seruaunt: Neuertheles in thy tyme will I not do it, for thy father Dauids sake, but from the hande of thy sonne wyl I plucke it. Howbeit 1 wyl not plucke y kyngdome cleane awaye. One trybe wyll I geue vato thy sonne, for Dauid my seruauntes sake, and for Ierusalems sake which I have chosen.
And the LORDE raysed vp an aduersary vnto Salomon, euen Hadad the Edomite of the kynges sede, which was in Edom. For whan Dauid was in Edom, and Ioab the chefe captayne wente vp to bury the slayne, he smote all the males in Edom. (For Ioab remayned there sixe monethes and all Israel, tyll he had roted out all $\stackrel{8}{y}$ males that were in Edom.) Then fled Hadad, and certayne men of y Moabites with him, of his fathers seruauntes. As for Hadad, he was a yonge man.

And they gat them vp fro Madian, and came vnto Paran, and toke men with them out of Paran, and came in to Egipte vnto Pharao the kynge of Egipte: which gaue him an house and certayne vytales appoynted, a gaue him a countre. And Adad founde greate fauoure in the sighte of Pharao, so that he gaue him to wife enen the sister of his owne wife Thaphenes the Quene. And Thaphenes sister bare him Genubath his sonne, and Thaphenes norished him vp in Pharaos house, in so moch that Genubath was in Pharaos house amonge Pharaos children.

Now whā Hadad herde in Egipte, that Dauid was falle on slepe with his fathers, and $\stackrel{t}{y}$ loab the chefe captayne was deed, he sayde vnto Pharao: Let me go in to my countre. Pharao sayde vnto him: What lackest thou with me, that thou wilt go in to thy countre? He sayde: Nothynge, but yet let me go.

God raysed him vp another aduersary also, one Reson the sonne of El Iada, which fled from his lorde Hadad Eser kynge of Zeba, and gathered men agaynst him, and was a captayne of the men of warre whan Dauid slewe them: and they wente vnto Damascus and dwelt there, and reigned at Damascus, and he was Israels aduersary as loge as Salomon lyued. This is the harme ${ }^{ \pm}$Hadad suffied: therfore had he euell will at Israel, and was kynge ouer Siria.

Morouer leroboam the sonne of Nebat an Ephraite Salomons seruaunt (and his mothers name was Zernga, a wedowe) lifte vp his hande also agaynst the kynge. And this is the cause wherfore he lifte vp his hande agayust the kyinge: Whan Salomon buylded Millo, he shut vp a gappe in the cite of Dauid his father. And Ieroboam was a mā of armes. And whan Salomon sawe that it was a mete yonge man, he set him ouer all the burthens of the honse of Ioseph.

But at the same tyme it fortuned, that leroboam wente out from Ierusalem, and the prophet Ahias of Silo founde him by the waye, and he had a new cloke vpon him, and they two were alone in the felde. And Ahia toke holde of the new cloke ${ }^{t}$ he had on, and rente the same in to twolue peces, and sayde vnto Jeroboam: Take thou ten peces vnto the.

For thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: Beholde, euen thus wyll I rente the kyngdome from the hande of Salomō, and wyll geue the ten trybes. One trybe shall he haue for my seruaunt Dauids sake, and because of the cyte of Ierusalem, + which I haue chosen out of all the trybes of Israel: for they hane forsaken me, and worshipped Astaroth the god of the Sidonians, Chamos the god of the Moabites, and Malco the god of the children of Ammon, and haue not walked in my wayes, to fulfill nyy pleasure, myne ordinaunces, and lawes, as dyd Dauid his father.

Notwithstondynge I wyll not take the whole kyngdome from out of his hande, but wil make him a prynce as longe as he lyueth for my seruaunt Dauids sake, whom I dyd chose, which kepte my commaundementes a ordinaunces. * From out of the hande of his sonne wyl I take the kyngdome, and wyl geve ten trybes vnto the, and one vnto his somne, ${ }^{+}$ that Dauid my seruaunt maye allwaye haue a lanterne before me in the cite of Ierusalem, which I have chosen, that I maye set my name there. Therfore wyl I take the now, to raygne ouer all that thine hert desyreth, and thou shalt be kynge ouer Israel. If thou folowe now all that I shall commaunde the, and walke in my wayes, and fulfill my pleasure to kepe myne ordinaunces and commaundementes, as dyd my seruan̄t Dauid, then wyll I be with the, and buylde the a sure house, as I buylded vnto Dauid, and wyl geue Israel mito the and therwith wyll I subdue the sede of Dauid, but not for euermore. But Salomon soughte to kyll leroboam. Then Ieroboam gat him vp, and fled in to Egipte to Sisak the kynge of Egipte, and remayned in Egipte, tyll Salomon dyed.

What more there is to saye of Salomon, and all that he dyd, and his wyszdome, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of Salomon. The tyme that Salomon was kynge at Ierusalem ouer all Israel, is fortye yeare. And Salomon fell on slepe with his fathers, and was buryed in the eite of Dauid his father, and Roboam his some was kynge in his steade.

AND Roboam wēte unto Sichem, for all Israel ${ }^{\text {a }}$ was come to Sichem to make him kynge. And whan Ieroboam $\dot{y}$ sonne of Nebat herde that, while he was yet in Egipte ( $\ddagger$ whither he was fled for Salomon) he came agayne out of Egipte. And they sent for him, and called him. And Ieroboain with all the congregacion of Israel came and spake to Roboam, and sayde: Thy father made oure yock to harde: therfore make thou now the harde bondage and the sore yock lighter, and we wyll submytte oure selues vnto the. He sayde unto them: Go youre waye vnto the thirde daye, and then come to me agayne. And the people wete their waye.

And Roboam the kynge helde a councell with the Elders that stode before Salomo his father whyle he lyued, x he sayde: What is youre councell, that we maye geue this people an answere? They sayde vnto him: If thou do this people a pleasure to daye, and folowe their mynde, and heare them, and geue them good wordes, then shal they be obedient unto the as longe as thou liuest. Neuertheles he forsoke the councell that $\frac{y}{y}$ Elders had geuen him, and axed councell at the yonge men which were growne vp with hin, and stode before him.

And he sayde vnto them: What is youre councell that we maye answere this people which haue sayde vnto me: Make the yock lighter, that thy father hath layed vpó vs. And the yonge men that were growne vp with him, sayde vinto him: Where as the people haue sayde vito the: Thy father hath made oure yock to sore, make thou it easyer for vs, Thus shalt thou saye vnto them: My litle fynger shall be thicker then my fathers loynes. Now, my father layed a sore yock vpon you, but I wyl yet laye more theron: My father correcte you with scourges, but I wyl nourtoure you with scorpions.

So vpon the thyrde daye came Ieroboam with all the people vnto Roboam, as $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ kynge had appoynted and saide, come to me agayne on the thyrde daye. And the kynge gaue the people an harde rough answere, and forsoke the coucell that the Elders bad geuen him, and talked with them after the councell of the yonge men, and sayde: My father made youre yock sore, but I wyll make it yet sorer vpon you. My father correcte you with scourges, but I wil nourtoure you with scorpiōs. Thus the kynge folowed not the peoples mynde, for he was turned so frō the LORDE, that he mighte stablish his worde \& which he spake by Ahias of Silo vnto Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat.

But whan all Israel sawe that the kynge wolde not heare them, the people gaue $i$ kynge an answere and sayde: "What poreion haue we then in Dauid or inheritannce in the sonne of lsai? Get the to thy tentes O Israel. Loke thou now to thy house thou Dauid. So Israel wente rnto their tentes. As for Roboam , he raigned but ouer $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ children of Israel, which dwelt in the eities of Iuda. And whan kynge Roboam sent thither Adoram the [^305]I rentgatherer, all Israel stoned him to death. But kynge Roboam strengthed himselfe, and gat him vp in to a charet, to fle vato Ierusalem. Thus departed lsrael from the house of Dauid vnto this daye.

Now whan all Israel herde, that Ieroboam was come againe, they sent for to call him to the whole congregacion, and made him kynge oner all Israel. And no man folowed the house of Dauid, sane onely the tribe of Iuda. * And whan Roboam came to Ierusalem, all the house of huda and the trybe of Ben Iamin (euen an hundreth and foure score thousande chosen men of armes) gathered themselues together to fight against $\dot{y}$ house of Israel, $\tau$ to brynge the kyngdome agayne vnto Roboam $\mathfrak{y}$ some of Salomó.

But the worde of God eame to Semeia the man of God, and sayde: Speake thou to Roboam the some of Salomon kynge of luda, and to all $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ house of luda and Ben Iamin, and to the other people, and saye: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Ye shall not go yp and fighte agaynst youre brethren the children of Israel. Let euery man go home agayne, for this is my dede. And they herkened vnto the worde of the LORDE, and turned back, to go their waye, as the LORDE sayde. But Roboam buylded Sichem vpon mount Ephraim, and dwelt therin, and departed thence, and buylded + Penuel.
leroboā thonghte in his hert: The kingdome shall fall agayne now vnto the house of Dauid, yf this people go vp to offre in the LORDES house at Ierusalem, and so shall the hert of this people turne to their lorde Roboam kynge of luda, and the shal they slaye me, and fall agayne to Roboam kynge of Iuda. And the kynge helde a councell $\ddagger$ and made two golden ealues, and sayde vnto beholde, there is thy God (O Israel) which broughte $y$ out of Egipte. And the one set he at Bethel, a the other in Dan. And this dede turned to synne, for the people wente before the one unto Dan.

He inade an house also in the hye places, $\|$ and made prestes of the smallest in the people, which were not of the childre of Leui. And ypon the fiftene daye of the eighte moneth he made an holy daye, like as the solempne feast [^306]in luda, and offered ypon the altare. Thus dyd he at Bethel, in doynge sacrifice vnto the calues which he had made, and at Bethel he ordeyned the prestes of the hye places that he had made: and offred vpon the altar (which he had made) at Bethel, the fiftene daye of the eight moneth, which he inuented of his owne hert. And he made the children of Israel an holy daye, a wente vp to the altare to burne incense.

©fer piij. © Cyapter.

AND beholde, there came a mā of God from Iuda (thorow the worde of the LORDE) mnto Bethel, and Ieroboam stode by the altar to burne incense. And he eried agaynst the altare thorow the worde of the LORDE, and sayde: O altar, altar, thus sayeth the LORDE: Beholde, there shal be borne vnto $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ house of Dauid a soune, Iosias by name ${ }^{\text {I }}$ which on the shal offer the prestes of the hye places, that burne incense rpon the, and mens bones shal he burne on the. And he gaue a wonder token the same daye, and sayde: This is the token, that the LORDE hath spoken it, beholde, the altar shall ryue, and the aszshes, that are theron, shall be poured out.

But whan the kynge herde the worde of the man of God, that cried agaynst the altare at Bethel, he stretched out his hande by y altare, and sayde: Laye hondes on him. And his hande that he stretched out, wythered, and he coulde not drawe it vnto him agayne. And ý altare roue, and the aszshes were poured out from the altare, acordinge to the wonder token that the man of God had geuen by the worde of the LORDE.

And the kynge answered, and sayde vnto the man of God: O praye the face of the LORDE thy God, and make intereession for me, that my hande maie be restored vito me agayne. Then prayed the man of God vnto the face of the LORDE. And the kynges hande was restored him agayne, and beeame as it was afore. And the kynge sayde vnto the man of God: Come home with me, and dyne, and I wil geue the a rewarde.

But the man of God sayde mnto the kynge: Yf thou genest me halfe thy house, I wil not come with the: for in this place wyll I nether [^307]eate bred, ner drynke water. For thus am I commaunded, and thus is it sayde vnto me by the worde of the LORDE: 'Thou shalt eate no bred, and drynke no water, nether returne the waye that thou wentest.

And he departed another waye, and returned not agayne the waye that he came to Bethel. But at Bethel there dwelt an olde prophet vnto whō his sonnes came, a tolde him all the workes $\frac{t}{y}$ the mā of God had done that daye at Bethel, a the wordes that he had spoken vnto the kynge. And their father sayde vnto them: Which waye is he gone? And his somes shewed him the waye that the man of God was gone: which came from Iuda. He sayde vnto his sonnes: Saddell me the asse. And what they had sadled him the asse, he rode theron, and wente after the man of God, and founde him syttinge vnder an Oke tre, and sayde vnto him: Art thou the man of God that came from Iuda? He sayde: Yee.

He sayde vnto him: Come home with me, and eate bred. He sayde: I maye not turne backe with the, and come with the. Nether wyll I eate bred, ner drynke water with the in this place: for it is spoken vnto me by the worde of the LORDE: Thou shalt nether eate bred there, ner yet drynke water, nether shalt thou go agayne by the waye which thou wentest. He sayde vnto him: I myselfe am a prophet as well as thou, and an angell hath spoken with me by y worde of the LORDE, and saide: Bringe him againe with the, that he maye eate bred, and drynke water. But he lyed vnto him, and broughte him agayne, so that he ate bred, and dranke water in his house.

And whan they sat at the table, the worde of the LORDE came to the prophet that had broughte him agayne, and cryed vnto the man which was come frō Iuda, and sayde: Thus E sayeth the LORDE: Because thou hast bene dishobedient vnto the mouth of y LORDE, and hast not kepte the commaundement that the LORDE thy God commaunded the, but hast turned backe, and hast eaten bred, and dronke water in 8 y place, wherof he saide vnto the: Thou shalt nether eate bred ner drynke water, therfore shall not thy body come in to thy fathers graue.

And whan he had eaten bred and dronkē the asse was sadled vnto the prophet whom he had brought agayne. *And whā he was gone, a lyon founde him by the waye, $\tau$ slewe him, and his body was cast in $\mathfrak{y}$ waye. And the asse stode by him, and the lyon stode by the body. And wha men wente by, they sawe the body cast in the waye, and the lyon stondynge besyde the body, and came and tolde it in the cite, where the olde prophet dwelt.

Whan the prophet which had broughte him agayne, herde that, he sayde: It is the man of God, that hath bene dishobediēt vnto the mouth of the LORDE, therfore hath $\dot{y}$ LORDE delyuered him vnto the Lyon, which hath rente him, and slayne him, acordynge to the worde that the LORDE spake vito him. And he sayde vnto his sonnes: Saddell me the asse. And whan they had sadled it, he wente, and founde his body cast in the waie and the asse and the lyon stondynge beside $\dot{y}$ body. The lyon had eate nothinge of the body, nether had he tome the asse. Then toke the prophet the deed coarse of the man of God, and layed it vpo the asse, and broughte it agayne in to the cite of the olde prophet, to mourne, and to burye him.

And he layed the coarse in his awne graue, and they mourned for him: Alas my brother. And whan they had buryed him, he saide vinto his sonnes: Whan I dye, burye me in the graue where the ma of God is buried, and laye my bones besyde his bones. † For it shal come to passe, that he cried (thorow the worde of the LORDE) against Bethel, and agaynst all y houses of the hye places, which are in the cities of Samaria.

Howbeit after this acte dyd not Ieroboā turne from his euell waye, but was peruerted, and made prestes of the hye places, eue of the smallest of the people: Loke whom it pleased him, his handes he fylled, a he was prest of the hye places. And whan Achab sawe Elias, Achab sayde vnto him: Art thou he that troublest Israel? He sayde : 1 trouble not Israel, tbut it is thou and thy fathers house, because ye haue forsaken the commaundementes of the LORDE, and walke after Baal. Go to, sende forth now, and gather me all lsrael together vnto mount Carmell, and the foure hundreth and fiftye prophetes of Baal, and the foure humdreth prophetes of $\dot{y}$ groue, which eate of Iesabels table. So Achab sent vnto all the children of 1srael, a gathered the prophetes together vnto mount Carmell.
Then stepte Elias vito all the people, a sayde: How longe halte ye on both $\dot{y}$ sydes? Yf the LORDE be God, the walke after him: but yf Baal be he, the folowe him. And the people gaue him no auswere. Thē sayde Elias vnto the people: 1 onely am lefte a prophet of $\hat{y}$ LORDE: but Baals prophetes are foure C. and fiftie mé. Geue vs now two bullockes, © let them chose one bullocke, a hewe him in peees, đlaye him ypō the wod, a put no fyre theron: so wil I take $\hat{y}$ other bullock, $\approx$ laye him vpo the wod, a put no fyre theron also: call ye then vpo the name of youre god, $\tau$ I wil call vpo the name of the LORDE: loke which God now answereth with fyre, let the same be God. And all the people answered a sayde: That is righte. And Elias sayde vnto Baals prophetes: Chose ye one bullock, and do ye it first (for ye are many) and eall ye vpon the name of youre god, a laye no fyre theron.

And they toke the bullock which he gaue them, a prepared it, a called vpon the name of Baal from the mornynge mtyll the noone daye, and sayde: O Baal heare vs. But there was nether voyce ner answere. And they hopped aboute the altare, as their vse was to do. Now whan it was noone daye, Elias mocked them, and sayde: Crye loude. For he is a god, peradueture he is musynge, or hath somwhat to do, or is gone some iourneye, or happlye he slepeth, so that he wolde be waked vp. And they cried loude, and prouoked the selues with knyues $\tau$ botkens, (as their maner was) tyll $y$ bloude folowed. But whan $y$ noone daye was past, they prophecied vntyll the tyme that the meatofferynge shulde be offered, $\mathfrak{z}$ there was nether voyee ner answere, ner one to regarde them.

And he sayde : Do it y thirde tyme. And they dyd it the thirde tyme. And $\dot{y}$ water ranne aboute the altare, and $\dot{y}$ pytt was full of water also.

And whan the tyme was to offer $\frac{8}{}$ meatofferynge, Elias stepte forth, and sayde: O LORDE God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Israel, let it be knowne this daye, that thou art God in Israel, and I thy seruaunt, and Heare me O LORDE, O heare me, $\frac{t}{t}$ this people maye knowe, how that thou art the LORDE Gorl, that thou mayest afterwarde turne their hertes. §Then fell downe the fyre of the LORDE, and consumed the burntofferinge, the wodd, the stones and the earth, and licked vp the water that was in the pytt. Whan all the people sawe that, they fell vpon their faces, and sayde: The LORDE is God, $\hat{y}$ LORDE is God. Elias sayde rnto them: \|Laye handes vpon Baals prophetes, $\dot{y}$ none of them escape. And they toke them. And Elias broughte them downe unto $\hat{y}$ broke Cyson, a slewe the there.

And Elias sayde vnto Achab: Go rp, eate a drynke, for it soundeth as though it wolde rayne sore. And whan Achab wēte vp to eate ta drinke, Elias ascēded yp to the toppe of Carmel, a bowed him selfe downe to the earth, © put his heade betwene his knees, at sayde vnto his lad: Go vp, and loke towarde the See. AND  Benadab ẙ kynge of siria gathered all his power, © there were two at thirtie kynges with him, thorses acharettes, and he wente vp, and layed sege vnto Samaria, a foughte agaynst it. And he sent messaungers vnto Achab $\dot{y}$ kynge of Israel in to $\dot{y}$ cite, a caused to saye vato him: Thus sayeth Benadab: Thy sylner a thy golde is myne, and thy wyues d thy best children are myne also. The kynge of İsrael answered, a sayde: My lorde O kynge, euen as thou hast sayde, 1 an thine, and all that I haue.

And the messaungers came agayne, a sayde: Thus sayeth Benadab: For so moch as I haue sent vnto the, sayenge: Thy syluer a thy golde, thy wyues a thy childre shalt thou geue me, tomorow aboute this tyme wil 1 sende my seruautes voto the, $\dot{f}$ they maye serch thyne house and the houses of thy subiectes: © loke what pleasaunt thinge thou hast, $\frac{t}{y}$ shal they take in their handes, and cary it awaye. Then sayde all the Elders and all the people unto him: Thou shalt not

And he spake vnto Benadabs messaūgers, Saye vnto my lorde $\mathfrak{y}$ kynge: All $\mathfrak{y}$ thynges wherfore thou dyddest sende vato me thy seruaunt at $\hat{y}$ first, wil I do, but this can I not do. And $\dot{y}$ messaungers wēte, and tolde this againe. Thē sent Benadab vnto him sayēge: The goddes do this and $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ vnto me, yf the dust of Samaria shalbe ynough, for euery one of my people to brynge me an handfull therof. But y kynge of lsrael answered, a sayde: Tell him, Let not him $\stackrel{t}{y}$ putteth on $\dot{f}$ harnes, make his boast like him ${ }^{ \pm}$hath put it of. Whā Benadab herde $\dot{y}$ (enē as he was drynkinge with the kynges in $\dot{y}$ pauylion) he sayde vnto his seruautes: Set youre selues in araye. And they set the selues in araie against ${ }^{\circ}$ eite.

And beholde, there came a prophet vnto Achab f kynge of Israel, a saide: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Hast thou sene all this greate multitude? Beholde, this daie wil I delyuer the in to thy hande, so $\stackrel{+}{y}$ thou shalt knowe, how $\mathfrak{y}$ l am fé LORDE. Achab sayde: By whom? He sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Euen by the yonge men of the rulers of the londe. He sayde: Who shal order the battayl? He sayde: Thou. Then mustered he the yonge men of the rulers of the londe, a there were two hīdreth and two and thirtie of them: $₫$ after the mustured he of the whole people of all the childre of Israel, seue thousande men, and they wente out in the noone daye. As for Benadab, he dranke and was dronken in the pauylion with the two $\pi$ thirtie kynges which were come to helpe him. And the yonge men of the rulers of the londe wente forth first.

Benadab sent forth, a they bronght him worde, $\tau$ sayde: There come men out of Samaria. He sayde: Take them alyue, whether they be come forth for peace, or for warre. But whan the loude rulers yonge men were gone forth, and the hoost behynde them, euery one smote him ${ }^{t}$ eame in his waye. And the Sirians fled, and Israel folowed after them. And Benadab the kynge of Syria eseaped with horses and horsme. And the kynge of Israel wente forth, and smote horses and charettes, and dyd a greate slaughter on the Syrians.

Then came there a prophet vnto the kynge of Israel, and sayde vnto him: Go thy waye and strength the, and take hede, and loke well what thou doest: for whan the yeare is aboute, the kynge of Syria shall come agaynst the of the new. For the kynge of $\dot{y}$ Syrians seruauntes sayde rato him: Their goddes are goddes of the mountaynes, therfore haue they gotten the victory.

But let vs fyghte with them on the playne, and thou shalt se that we shal ouercome them. Do thus, put awaye the kynges euery one from his place, and set dukes in their steades. and appoynte the an hoost as was that which thou hast lost, a horses a charettes as the other were, and let vs fight agaynst the in the plaine, and thou shalt se that we shal haue the vietory. He eosented vato their voyce, and dyd so.

Now whan the yeare was gove aboute, Benadab appoynted the Sirians, and wente vp towarde Aphek, to fighte agaynst Israel, and the childre of Israel mustured, and prouyded them selues with vytailes, and wete to mete them, and pitehed their tētes ouer against them, like two litle flockes of goates but the londe was full of the Syrians.

And there eame a man of God, and sayde vnto the kynge of Israel: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Beeause the Syrians haue sayde, that the LORDE is a God of the mountaynes and not a God of the valleys, therfore haue I genen all this greate heape in to thy handes, that ye maye knowe how that I am $f$ L.ORDE. And they pitched their tentes right ouer agaynst them seuen dayes. But vpon $\hat{\mathbf{y}}$ seuenth daye they wente together in to the battayll: and the children of Israel smote of the sirians an hundreth thousande fote men in one daye, and the remnaunt fled to Aphek in to the eite, and the wall fell rpon the other seuen and twenty thousande men. And Benadab fled also vnto the cite in to a litle chamber.

Then sayde his seruauntes vnto him: Beholde, we haue herde that the kynges of the house of Israel are mercifull kinges, Let is therfore put sack eloth aboute oure loynes, and halters aboute oure neekes, a go forth to the kynge of Israel, peraduenture he shal let thy soule lyue.
Aud they put saek eloth aboute their loynes, and halters aboute their neckes, and came to the kynge of Israel, and sayde: Benadab thy seruaunt sayeth vnto the: O let my soule lyue. He sayde: yf he be yet alyue, he is my brother. And the men toke him shortly at his worde, and expomed it for them selues and sayde: Yee Benadab is thy brother. He sayde: Come and brynge him. The wente Benadab forth vnto him, and he caused him to syt ypon the eharet, and sayde vuto him: The eities that my father toke from thy father, wyl I geue the agayne. And make thou stretes for thyselfe at Damascō, as my father did at Samaria, so wyl I let the go with a bonde of peace. And be made a couenaunt with him, and let him go.

Then spake there a man amonge the children of the prophetes vnto his neghboure by the worde of the LORDE: I praye the smite me. But he refised to smite him. Then saide he vnto him, because thou hast not herkened suto the voyce of the LORDE, beholde, therfore shall there a lyon smyte the, whan thou goest fro me. *And whan he wente frō him, a lyon founde him, and slewe him.
6 And he founde another man, and sayde: 1 praye the smyte me. And the man smote him, and wounded him. Then wente the prophet, and stepte vnto the kynge by the waye syde, and altered his face with aszshes. And whan the kynge wente by, he cried vpon $\dot{y}$ kynge, and sayde: Thy seruaunt wente forth in to the battayll, and beholde, there wente one asyde, and broughte a man vato me, and sayde: K'epe this mā: yf he be myssed, thy soule shall be in steade of his soule, or els thou shalt weye downe an hundreth weighte of syluer. And whyle thy seruaunt had here a there to do, he was awaye. The kynge of Israel sayde vnto him: It is thine owne iudgment, thou hast geuen it thyselfe.

Then put he the aszshes from his face in all the haist. And the kynge of Israel knewe him, that he was one of the prophetes. And he sayde vnto him: Thus sayeth the LORDE; Beeause thou hast let the damned man go, therfore shall thy soule be for his soule, and thy people for his people. And the kynge of lsrael departed vato his house, beinge troubled in his mynde and full indignacion, and came to Samaria.

He sayde unto him : I wyll go forth, and be a false sprete in the mouth of all his prophetes. He saide: Thou shalt disceaue him, and shalt be able: go forth and do so. Beholde now, the LORDE hath geue a false sprete in $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ mouth of all these thy prophetes, and the LORDE hath spoken euell ouer the. Then stepte forth Sedechias the sonne of Cnaena, and smote Micheas vpon the cheke, and sayde: What, is the sprete of the LORDE departed fro me, to speake with the? Micheas sayde: Beholde, thou shalt se it in $\frac{t}{f}$ daye, whan thou shalt go frō one chamber to another to hyde the.

The kynge of Israel sayde: Take Micheas, and let him remayne with Amon the ruler of the cite, and with loas the kynges some, and of trouble, tyll 1 come agayne in peace. Micheas sayde: Yf thou commest agayne in peace, then hath not the LORDE spoken thorow me. And he sayde : herken to all ye people.

So the kynge of Israel and losaphat $\dot{y}$ kynge of luda wente vp vato Ramoth in Gilead. And the kynge of Israel sayde vnto losaphat: Chaunge thy clothes, and come in to $\dot{y}$ battayll in thine araie. The kinge of 1srael chaunged his clethes also, and wēte in to the battayll. But the kynge of Siria commaunded the rulers of his charettes (of whom there were two and thirtie) and saide: Ye shal fight nether agaynst small ner greate, but onely agaynst the kynge of Israel. And whan the rulers of the charettes sawe losaphat, they thought it had bene the kynge of Israel, and fell vpon him with fightinge. But losaphat cried. So whan the rulers of the charettes sawe that it was not $\dot{y}$ kinge of Israel, they turned back frō him.

A certayne man bended his bowe harde, and shott the kynge of Israel betwene the mawe and $\frac{\circ}{y}$ longes. And he sayde vnto his charetman: Turne thine hāde, and cary me out of the hoost, for 1 am wounded. And $\dot{y}$ battayll was sore the same daie. And the kinge stode vpō his charet, agaynst the Syriās and dyed in the eueninge, and the bloude ranne from the wounde in to the myddes of the charet. And whan the Sonne wente downe there was a proclamacion made in the hoost, and sayde: Euery one gett him in to his cite, and to his countre. Thus the kynge dyed, and was broughte vnto Samaria, and they buryed him in Samaria. And whan they waszshed the charet in the pole of Samaria, $\ddagger$ y dogges licked his blonde (but the harlottes waszshed him) acordinge to the worde of $\dot{y}$ LORDE which he spake.

What more there is to saye of Achab, $\mathfrak{x}$ all ${ }^{t}$ he dyd, and of the Yuery house which he buylded, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. So Achab slepte with his fathers, and his sonne Ahasia was kynge in his steade.

6 And losaphat the sonne of Asa was kynge ouer Iuda in the fourth yeare of Achab kynge of Israel, and was fyue and thirtie yeare olde whan he was made kynge, and raigned fyue and twentye yeare at lerusale. His mothers name was Asuba $\dot{y}$ doughter of Sillh, and he walked in all the waye of his father Asa, a departed not there from. And he dyd that which was right in $\dot{f}$ sighte of the LORDE, yet put he not awaye $\dot{y}$, hie places, and $\dot{y}$ people offred and brent incēse yet vpon the hye places, and he had peace with the kynge of Israel.

What more there is to saye of Iosaphat and the mighte that he exercised, and how he fought, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. * He put out of the +3 Reg. 15. b. londe also the whoremongers that yet were lefte, which remayned ouer in the tyme of his father Asa. And at that tyme there were no kynges in Edom. And Iosaphat harl caused to make shippes vpon the See, which shulde go to fetch golde in Ophir, but they wente not: for they were broken at Ezeon Gaber. At that tyme sayde Ahasia the sonne of Achab vnto Iosaphat: Let my seruauntes passe with thy seruauntes in the shippes. But Iosaphat wolde not. And Iosaphat slepte with his fathers, and was buried in $\dot{y}$ cite of Dauid. And Ioram his sonne was kynge in his steade.

Chy furst Chapter.

A HASIA the sonne off Achab was kynge ouer Israel at Samaria in $\hat{y}$ seuententh yeare of Iosaphat kige of Iuda, a reigned ouer Israel two yeares, adyd $\dot{y}$ which was euell in $\dot{y}$ sight of the LORDE, and walked in the waye of his father and of his mother, $\mathbb{\imath}$ in the waie of Ieroboam $\dot{y}$ some of Nebat, which made Israel for to synne. And serued Baal, and worshipped him, and displeased the LORDE God of Israel, eue as his father dyd. The Moabites also fell awaye from Israel, whan Achab was deed.

And Ochosias fell thorow $\hat{y}$ grate in his chäber at Samaria, and was deed sicke, and sent messaungers, and sayde vnto them: Go youre waye, and axe councell at Beelzebub the god of Ekron, whether I shall recouer from this sicknesse. But the angell of $\dot{y}$ LORDE sayde vito Elias the Theszbite: $V_{p}$, a go mete the messaungers of the kynge $z_{3}$ of Samaria, and saie vnto them: Is there no God in Israel, that ye go to axe councell at $\mathfrak{y}$ god of Ekron? Therfore thus sayeth the LORDE: Thou shalt not come from the bed wheron thou lyest, but shalt dye the death.

And Elias wente his waye. And whā $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ messaungers came to Ochosias agayne, he sayde unto thē: Why come ye agayne? They sayde vnto him: There came rp a man in oure waye, and sayde vnto rs: Go againe to the kinge that hath sent you, and saye vnto him: Thus saieth the LORDE: Is there no God in lsrael, ${ }^{f}$ thou sendest to axe coūcel at Beelzebub y $\mathfrak{y}$ god of Ekrō? Therfore shalt thou not come from $y$ bed wheron thou lyest, but shalt dye the death. He sayde vnto them: What maner of man was it that mett you, and sayde this mnto you? They sayde vnto him: He had a rough heer vpon him, and a letheren gyrdell aboute his loynes. He sayde: It is Elias the Theszbite.

And he sent vnto him a captaine ouer fiftye, with the same fyftye. And whan he came vnto him, beholde, he sat aboue vpon the moñt. He sayde vnto him : Thou mì of God, the kynge sayeth: Thou shalt come downe. Elias answered the captayne ouer fyftye, and sayde unto him: Yf I be a man of God, the fyre fall downe then from heauen, and cosume the and thy fyftie. *Then fell there fire from heauen, and consumed him and his fyftye. And agayne he sent another captayne ouer fyftye rnto him, with his fyftye, which answered, and sayde vnto him: Thou man of God, thus sayeth the kynge: Come downe in all the haist. Elias answered, and saide: If I be a mā of God, $\dot{y}$ fire fall downe from heauen, and consume the and thy fyftye. Then fell the fyre of God from heaven, x consumed him, and his fyftye. Agayne, he sent vuto him the thirde captayne ouer fyftye, with his fyftie.

Now whan he came to him, he kneled to Elias, and besoughte him, and sayde vnto him: Thou man of God, let my soule and y soules of thy seruauntes these fyftye, be somwhat worth in thy syghte. Beholde, the fyre fell downe from heauen, and hath consumed the fyrst two captaynes ouer fyftye with their fyftyes. But now let my soule be somwhat worth in thy sighte. Then saide the angel of the LORDE vnto Elias: Go downe with him, and feare him not. And he gatt him vp, and wente downe with him vnto y kynge.

And he sayde vnto him: Thus saieth the LORDE: Because thou hast sent forth messaūgers, and caused to axe councell at Beelzebub the god of Ekron, as though there were no God in Israel to axe coūcell at his worde, therfore shalt thou not come from the bed wheron thou hast layed the, but shalt dye $\dot{y}$ death. So he dyed, acordynge to the worde of the LORDE which Elias sayde. And loram (his brother) was kynge in his steade in the seconde yeare of Ioram the sonne of Iosaphat kynge of Iuda : for he had no sonne.

What more there is to saye of Ochosias, what he dyd, beholde, it is wrytté in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel.

WHAN the LORDE was mynded to $a$ take rp Elias in the tempest, Elias and Eliseus wente from Gilgall. And Elias sayde to Eliseus: Tary thou here I praye the, for the LORDE hath sent me vuto Bethel. But Eliseus sayde: As truly as the LORDE liueth, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, I wyll not forsake the. And whan they came downe mnto Bethel, the prophetes children that were at Bethel, wēte forth to Eliseus, and sayde vnto him: Knowest thou not, that the LORDE wyl take thy lorde awaye from thy heade this daye? He saide: I knowe it well, holde ye youre peace.

And Elias sayde vnto him: Eliseus, tary thou here I praye the, for the LORDE hath sent me vnto Iericho. Neuerthelesse he sayde: as truly as the LORDE lyueth, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, I wy not forsake the.

And whan they came vnto Iericho, the prophetes children which were at Iericho, stepte forth to Eliseus and sayde mnto him: Knowest thou not that the LORDE wyll take thy lorde awaye from thy heade this daie? He sayde: I knowe it well, holde ye youre peace. And Elias sayde vuto him: I praie the tary here, for $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE hath sent me vnto Iordane. But he sayde: As truly as the LORDE Iyueth, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, I wil not forsake the. And they wente both together. But fyftye men of y prophetes children wēte forth, and stode oner agaynst the a farre of: but they both stode by Iordane. Then toke Elias his cloke, and wrapped it together, and smote the water, which deuyded it selfe on both the sydes, so that they weete dry shod thorow it. And whan they were eome ouer, Elias sayde vnto Eliseus: Axe what I shall do for the, afore I be taken awaye from the. Eliseus saide: That thy sprete maye be vpō me to speake twyse as moch.

He sayde: Thou hast desyred an harde thinge: neuertheles yf thou shalt se me whā I am taken awaye from the, it shal be so: Yf no, the shal it not be. And as they were goinge together, and he talked, there came a fyrie eharet with horses of fyre, and parted the both asunder. †And so wente Elias vp to heauen in the storme. But Eliseus sawe it, $x$ crsed: My father, my father, the charetman of Israel and his horsme.. And he sawe him nomore.

And he toke holde of his clothes, and rente them in tro peces, and toke yp Elias cloke that was fallen from him, and turned backe, and stode by the shore of Iordane, and toke the same cloke of Elias which was fallen from him, and smote it in the water, and saide : Where is now the LORDE God of Elias? And he smote it in to the water, and then parted it asunder on both the sydes, and Eliseus wente thorow.

And whan the prophetes children which were at Iericho ouer agaynst him, sawe him, they sayde: The sprete of Elias resteth vpō Eliseus, and so they wète forth to mete him, and worshipped him to the groūde, and sayde vnto him: Beholde, there are fiftye valeaunt me amonge thy seruauntes, let them go and seke thy lorde, peraduenture the sprete of the LORDE hath taken him, and cast him vpon some mountaine or in some valley. But he saide: Sende them not. Neuertheles they eonstrayned him, tyll he was ashamed, and sayde: Let them go. And they sent fiftye men, which soughte him thre dayes: but they founde him not, and came agayne vnto him. And he abode at Iericho, and sayde vnto them: Tolde not I you, that ye shulde not go? And the men of the cite sayde vnto Eliseus: Beholde, there is good dwellynge in this cite, as my lorde seyth, but the water is euell, and the londe vnfrutefull.

He sayde: Bringe me hither a new vessell, a put salt in it. And they broughte it him. Then wete he forth vnto the well of water, and cast the salt therin, a sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: I haue healed this water: from hence forth shal there no deed ner vnfrutefulnes come of it. So the water was healed unto this daye, acordinge to the worde of Eliseus which he spake.

And he wēte vp towarde Bethel. And as he was goynge vp by the waye, there came litle boyes out of the cite, and mocked him, a sayde: Come rp here thou balde heade, come vp here thou balde heade. And he turned him aboute. And whia he sawe them, he cursed them in the name of the LORDE. Then came there two Beeres out of the wod, and rente two and fortye of the children. From thence wète he vp into mount Carmel, and from it turned he backe to Samaria.

The iij. Chapter.

IORAM the sonne of Achab was kynge ouer Israel at Samaria in $\dot{y}$ eightenth yeare of Iosaphat kynge of Iuda, a raigned xij. yeares, $\tau^{\frac{1}{2}}$ dyd $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{y}$ which was euell in $\dot{y}$ sighte of y LORDE, but not as his father $\mathfrak{a}$ his mother: for he put awaye $\dot{y}$ pilers of Baal, which his father caused to make. Neuertheles he cleued vnto $\dot{y}$ synnes of Ieroboā $\dot{y}$ sonne of Nebat, which made Israel for to synne, a departed not there fro.

Mesa $\dot{y}$ kynge of the Moabites had many shepe, a payed tribute vnto the kynge of Israel with the woll of an hundreth thousande lābes, $\tau$ of an hūdreth thousande rāmes. * But whan Achab was deed, the kynge of $\dot{y}$ Moabites fell awaye frō the kynge of Israel. At $\dot{y}$ same tyme wēte kynge Ioram frō Samaria, a mustered all Israel, a sent vnto Iosaphat kynge of Iuda, sayenge: The kynge of the Moabites is fallen awaye fro me, come thou with me to fighte agaynst $\frac{8}{y}$ Moabites. He sayde: I wil come vp, $\dagger \mathrm{I}$ am euen as thou, and my people as thy people, and my horses as thy horses. And sayde morouer: Which waye wil we go vp? He sayde: by the waye in the wyldernesse of Edom.

So the kynge of Israel, the kynge of Iuda, $\pi$ the kynge of Edom wente forth. And whan they had gone aboute seue dayes iourney, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ hoost © the catell ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ were amonge the had no water. Then sayde the kynge of Israel: Alas, the LORDE hath called these thre kynges, to delyuer the in to the hande of the Moabites. But Iosaphat sayde : $\ddagger$ Is here no prophet of $y$ LORDE, ${ }^{t}$ we maye axe coūcell at $y$ LORDE by him? Then answered one of y kynge of Israels seruauntes, $x$ saide: Here is Eliseus y sonne of Saphat, which poured water vpon Elias handes. Iosaphat sayde: The worde of $y$ LORDE is with him. So the kynge of Israel $\mathbb{t}$ Iosaphat, and $\dot{y}$ kynge of Edom wente downe vnto him.

But Eliseus sayde vnto the kynge of Israel: What hast thou to do with me? go to the prophetes of thy father $\pi$ to thy mothers prophetes. The kinge of Israel saide vnto him: No, for $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ LORDE hath called these thre kynges, to delyuer them in to the handes of the Moabites. Eliseus sayde: As truly as the LORDE Zebaoth lyueth, before whom I stöde, yf I regarded not losaphat the kynge of Iuda, I wolde not regarde the, ner set oughte by $\mathfrak{y}$. So bringe me now a mynstrell. And whan the mynstrell played vpo the instrument, the hande of the LORDE came vpō him. And he sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Make pittes by this broke. For thus sayeth the LORDE: Ye shal se nether wynde ner rayne, yet shall the broke be full of water, that ye and youre housholdes a youre catell maie drynke. Yee and that is but a small thinge in the sighte of the LORDE. And the Moabites shal he delyuer in to youre handes, so $\frac{t}{y}$ ye shal smyte all the stronge cities, and all y chosen cities * a shal fell downe all the good trees, and stoppe all the welles of water and all the good feldes shall ye make waist with stones.

On the morow, whan the meatofferynge is offered, beholde, there came water $\dot{y}$ waye from Edom, and fylled $\hat{y}$ londe with water. But whan the Moabites herde, $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ the kynges came vp to fighte agaynst thē, they called all $\dot{y}$ harnessed men, $\frac{a}{}$ their rulers, $t$ stode on $\dot{y}$ border. And whan they rose early in y mornynge, $\mathbb{t}$ the Sonne wēte yp vpon $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ water, the Moabites thoughte the water ouer agaynst the to be eué as reed as bloude, a they sayde: It is bloude, y kynges haue destroyed them selues with the swerde, a one hath smytten another. Now Moab get the vp to the spoyles. But whan they came to the tentes of Israel, the Israelites gat vp, đ smote the Moabites, © they fled before them.

Neuertheles they came in, $九$ smote Moab, a brake downe the cities, a euery one cast his stone vpon all the good feldes, and made them full, and stopped all $\dot{y}$ welles of water, and felled downe all the good trees, tyll there remayned but the stones in the brickwall, and they compased them aboute with slynges, and smote them.

But whā the kynge of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ Moabites sawe $\stackrel{t}{y}$ the battayll was to stroge for him, he toke to him seuen C. men, which drue ${ }^{\circ}$ swerde, to fall vpon the kynge of Edom: neuertheles they were not able. Then toke he his first sonne, which shulde haue bene kynge in his steade, and offred him for a burntofferynge [^313]vpon the wall. Then came there a greate wrath ouer Israel, that they departed from him, and turned agayne in to their londe.

AND there cried a woman amoge the wyues of the prophetes children vnto Eliseus, and sayde: Thy seruaunt my huszbāde is deed, and thou knowest that thy seruaunt feared the LORDE. Now commeth the man that he was detter vnto, and wyll take awaye both my children to be bonde seruauntes. Eliseus sayde vnto her: What shal I do for the? Tell me, what hast thou in the house? She sayde: Thy handmayden hath nothinge in the house but a pitcher with oyle. He sayde: Go thy waye, borowe without of all thy neghboures emptye vessels, at that not a fewe, and go in, and shut $\dot{y}$ dore behynde the with thy sonnes, and poure of it in to all y vessels: a whan thou hast fylled them, delyuer them forth.

And he cried vpon Gehasi, and sayde: Call the Sunamitisse. And whan he had called her, she came in vnto him. He sayde: Take there thy sonne. Then came she, and fell at his fete, and worshipped vnto the grounde, and toke hir sonne, and wente forth.

But whā Eliseus came againe vnto Gilgal, there was a derth in the londe, a the prophetes children dwelt before him, a he sayde vnto his seruaunt: Set on a greate pot, and make potage for the children of the prophetes. Then wente there one in to the felde, to gather herbes, and founde a Cucumbers stalke, $\leftrightarrows$ gathered wylde Cucumbers therof his cotefull. And whan he came, he chopped it small for potage to the pott, for they knewe it not. And whā they poured it forth for the me to eate, a they ate of $\dot{y}$ potage, they cried and sayde: O thou man of God, death is in the pot: for they mighte not eate it. Neuertheles he sayde: Brynge meel hither. And he put it in the pot, a sayde: Poure it out for the people, that they maye eate. And then was it not bytter in the pot.

There came a man from Baal Salisa, $\sqrt{5}$ broughte the man of God bred of the first frutes, namely twentye barlye loaues, a new corne in his garment. But he sayde: Geue it vnto y people, that they maye eate. His mynister sayde: $\ddagger$ How shall I geue an hūdreth men of this? He sayde: Geue it vnto the people, that they maye eate. For thus sayeth the LORDE: They shal eate, and there shall be lefte ouer. And he set it before them, so that they ate, and there lefte ouer, acordinge to $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ worde of the LORDE.

The b. Chapter.

NAAMAN the chefe captayne of the kynge of Syria, was an excellēt mā in the sighte of his lorde, and moch set by (for thorow him the LORDE gaue health vito Syria) and he was a mightie man, but a leper. And there had men of warre fallen out of Syria, and caried awaye a litle damsel out of the londe of Israel: the same was in sernyce with Naamās wife, and sayde vnto hir mastresse: O that my master were with the prophet at Samaria, he wolde heale him from his leprosy.

Then wente he in to his lorde, and tolde him, and sayde: Thus and thus hath the damsel of the londe of Israel spoken. The kynge of Syria sayde: Go thy waye then, זI wyl wrytte a letter vnto the kynge of Israel.

And he wente, and toke with him ten hundreth weighte of syluer, and sixe thousande guldens, © ten chaunge of rayment, © broughte the letter vnto the kynge of Israel, with these wordes:

Whan this letter commeth vnto the, beholde, thou shalt vaderstonde $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{}$ I haue sent my seruaunt Naaman vnto the, that thou mayest heale him of his leprosy.

And whan the kynge of Israel red the letter, he rente his clothes, $\mathfrak{c}$ sayde: Am I God then, that I can kyll and quycke agayne, $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ he sendeth vnto me, to heale the man fro his leprosy? Considre and se, how he seketh an oceasion vnto me.

Whan Eliseus the man of God herde, ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{y}}$ the kynge of Israel had rente his clothes, he sent vito him, sayenge: Why hast thou rente thy clothes? Let him come to me, that he maye knowe, $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ there is a prophet in Israel.

So Naaman came with horses and charettes, and helde still at the dore of Eliseus house. Then sent Eliseus a messaunger vnto him, sayenge : Go thy waye, and waszshe the seuen tymes in Iordane, so shal thy flesh be restored the agayne, 九 be clensed. Then was Naaman wroth, a wente his waye, © sayde: I thoughte he shulde haue come forth vnto me, a to haue stōde here $\mathbb{C}$ to haue called vpo the name of the LORDE his God, $x$ to have touched the place with his hande, $\pi$ so to haue put awaye the leprosy. Are not $\hat{y}$ waters of Amana and Pharphar at Damascon better then all the waters in Israel, $\stackrel{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ I might waszshe me therin Ts be clesed? and he turned him, and wète his waye in displeasure. Then his seruauntes gat the to him, and sayde: Father, yf the prophet had cōmaunded the eny greate thinge, shuldest thou not haue done it? moch more the yf he saye vnto the: Wasshe the, a thou shalt be cleane. Then wète he downe, a waszshed him selfe in Iordane seue tymes (as the man of God sayde) a his flesh was restored him agayne, cuen as the flesh of a yonge childe * and he was clensed.

And he turned agayne to $\mathfrak{y}^{f}$ man of God with all his armye. And whan he came in, he stode before him, and sayde: Beholde, I knowe that in all londes there is no God, but in Israel. 'Take now therfore this blessynge I praye the of thy seruaunt. Neuertheles he sayde: $\dagger$ As truly as the LORDE lyueth, before whom I stonde, I wil not take it. And he wolde nedes haue him to take it, but he wolde not. Then sayde Naaman: Mighte there not a burthē of this earth be geue vnto thy seruaunt, as moch as two Mules maye beare? For thy seruaunt wyll nomore do saerifice and offer burntofferynges vnto other goddes, but vito the LORDE, That the LORDE maye be gracious vnto thy seruaunt, yf I worshippe in the house of Rimmon, whā my lorde goeth there in to $\dot{y}$ house to worshippe, a leaneth vpon my hande. He sayde vito him: Go thy waye in peace.

And as he was gone from him a felde bredth in the londe, Gehasi the seruaunt of Eliseus y man of God thoughte: beholde, my lorde hath spared Naama this Syrian, so that he hath not taken from thim $\dot{y}$ which he broughte: As truly as $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE lyueth, $I$ wil rūne after him, © take somthinge of him.

So Gehasi folowed Naaman. And whā Naaman sawe $\frac{t}{y}$ he ranne after him, he lighte downe from the charet to mete him, $t$ sayde: Are all thinges well? He sayde: Yee. But my lorde hath sent me, ז caused to saye vnto the: Beholde, there are now come to me fro mount Ephraim two yonge men of the prophetes childrē, geue them a talête of siluer (I) praye the) os two chaunge of rayment. Naamà saide: Go to, take two talētes. And he copelled him, © baude two talentes in two bagges, and two chaunge of rayment, and delyuered it vnto two of his seruauntes, which bare it before him. And whan he came in y dareke, he toke it from their handes, $r$ layed it a syde in the house, a let the men go.

And whan they were gone their waye, he stode before his lorde. And Eliseus sayde vnto him: Whence commest thou Gehasi? He savde: 'Thy seruaunt wente nether hither ner thither. But he sayde vnto him: Wente not my hert with the, whan the man turned backe from his eharet to mete the? Now thou hast take the syluer $\pi$ the rayment, olyue trees, vynyardes, shepe, oxen, seruauntes a maydens. But the leprosy of Naaman shal eleue vnto the a to thy sede for euer. *Then wēte he forth from him leporous as snowe.

a $\quad$ LHE children of y prophetes sayde vnto Eliseus: Beholde, the place where we dwell before $\mathfrak{y}$, is to narow for vs, let vs go vnto Iordane, $\mathbb{c}$ euery one fetch tymbre there, y we maye there buylde vs a place to dwell in. He saide: Go youre waye. And one sayde: Go to then, a come with thy seruauntes. He sayde: I wil go with you. And he wēte with them. And whan they came to Iordane, they hewed downe tymber. And as one was fellynge downe a tre, the yron fell in to the water, and he eried and sayde: Alas my lorde, c it is burowed. But the man of God sayde : Where fell it in? And whan he had shewed him the place, he cut downe a sticke, and thrust it in there. Then swame the yron. And he sayde: Take it vp. So he put forth his hande, and toke it.

And the kynge of Syria warred agaynst Israel, and toke councell at his seruauntes, and sayde: There a there will we lye. But the man of God sent to $\dot{y}$ kynge of Israel, sayenge: Bewarre $\frac{t}{y}$ thou go not onto that place, for the Syrians rest there. - 2 Par. 26. d.

Then sayde one of his seruauntes: Not so my lorde O kynge, but Eliseus the prophet in Israel telleth the kynge of Israel all that thou speakest in thy chamber where thou lyest. He sayde: Go youre waye thē and loke where he is, that I maye sende, and cause him be fetched. And they shewed him and sayde: Beholde, he is at Dothan. The sent he thither horses a charetes, a a greate power. And wha they came thither by nighte, they compased the cite aboute. And the mynister of the mā of God arose early to get him vp. And as he wete forth, beholde, there laye an hoost of men aboute $\dot{y}$ cite with horses and charettes.

Then saide his childe vnto him: Alas syr, how wyll we now do? He sayde: $\dagger$ Feare not, for there are mo of them $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ are with vs, then of those that are with them. And Eliseus prayed a sayde: LORDE open his eyes, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he maye se. Then the LORDE opened $\stackrel{y}{y}$ childes eyes, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he sawe, of beholde, $\dot{y}$ mount was full of fyrie horses a charettes roūde aboute Eliseus. And whā they came downe vnto him, Eliseus made his prayer, a sayde: LORDE smyte this people with blyndnes. $\ddagger$ And he smote the with blyndnes acordinge to the worde of Eliseus. And Eliseus saide vnto them: This is not $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ waye nor the eite, folowe me, I wil brynge you to the man whom ye seke. And he broughte them vnto Samaria.

And whan they came to Samaria, Eliseus sayde: LORDE open these mens eyes, $\frac{\downarrow}{y}$ they maye se. And the LORDE opened their eyes, $\frac{t}{y}$ they sawe, a beholde, they were in the myddes of Samaria. And whan the kynge of Israel sawe them, he saide vnto Elisens: My father, shal I smyte thē? He saide: Thou shalt not smyte thé : loke whom thou takest with thy swerde and bowe, smyte those. Set bred and water before them, that they maye eate and drynke, and let them departe vnto their lorde. The was there a greate dyner prepared. And whan they had eaten and dronken, he let them go to departe vnto their lorde. From that tyme forth came the men of warre of the Syrians nomore in to the londe of Israel.

After this it fortuned, that Benadab the kynge of Syria gathered all his hoost, and wēte vp, a layed sege unto Samaria: © there +2 Par. 32. b. $\ddagger$ Gen. 19. c. was a greate derth at Samaria. But they layed sege to the cite so longe, tyll an Asses heade was worth foure score syluer pes, and the fourth parte of a * Cab of doues donge worth fyue syluer pens. And whan the kynge of Israel wente vnto the wall, a woman cried vnto him and sayde: Helpe me my lorde O kynge. He sayde: Yf the LORDE helpe the not, wherwith shal I helpe the? with y barne or with the wyne presse? And the kynge sayde vnto her: What ayleth y? She sayde: This woman sayde vnto me: Geue vs thy sonne, that we maye eate him, tomorow wyll we eate my sonne. So we sod my sonne, a haue eaten him, and I sayde mnto her on $\mathfrak{y}$ thirde daye: Geue vs thy sonne and let vs eate him, but she hath hyd him awaye.

Whan the kynge herde the womans wordes, he rente his clothes, whyle he was goynge to the wall. The sawe all the people, that he had a sack cloth vader vpon his body. And he sayde: $\dagger$ God do this and that vato me, yf the heade of Eliseus the sonne of Saphat shal this daye stonde vpon him. As for Eliseus, he sat in his house, at the Elders sat by him. And he sent a man before him, but or euer the messaunger came to him, he sayde vnto $\dot{y}$ Elders: Haue ye not sene how this childe of murthure hath sent hither, to take awaye my heade? Then cried $\dot{y}$ porters and tolde it within in $\mathfrak{y}$ kynges house. And the kynge arose in the nighte, a sayde mnto his sernauntes: I will tell you how $\mathfrak{y}$ Syrians deale with vs: they knowe $\frac{t}{}$ we suffer honger, and are gone ont of the tētes, to hyde them selues in the felde, and thynke thus: whan they go out of the cite, we wyll take them alyue, a come in to the cite. Then turned Ioram his hande and fled, and sayde vnto Ochosias: There is treason Ochosias. But lehu toke his bowe, a shot Ioram betwene the armes, that the arowe wente thorow his hert, and he fell downe in his charet. And Iehu sayde vnto Bidekar the knyghte: Take and cast him in the pece of londe of Naboth the Iesraelite : for I remembre sence thou rodest with me in a charet after Achab his father, that the LORDE df wolde laye this heuy burthen vpon him. I

Whan Ochosias the kinge of Iuda sawe this, he fled by the waie vato y garden house. But Iehu folowed after him, and commaunded to smyte him also vpon his charet in the goynge vp towarde Gur, which lieth by Ieblaam: and he fled vnto Megiddo, and dyed there. And his seruauntes caused him to be caried vnto lerusalem, and there they buryed him in his awne graue with his fathers in the cite of Dauid. Ochosias reigned ouer Iuda in $\mathfrak{y}$ eleuenth yeare of Iorā $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Achab. And whan Iehu came to Iesrael, and Iesabel herde therof, she coloured hir face, and decked hir heade, and loked out at the wyndowe. And whan Iehu came vnder the gate, she sayde: $\ddagger$ Prospered Symri well that slewe his lorde?

And he lifte vp his face to the wyndow, and sayde: Who is with me? Then resorted there two or thre chamberlaynes unto him. He sayde: Cast her downe headlinges. And they cast her downe headlynges, so that $\hat{y}$ wall and the horses were sprenkled with hir bloude, and she was trodde vnder fete. And whan he came in, and had eaten and dronken, he sayde: Loke rpon yonder cursed woman, a burye her, for she is a kynges doughter. Neuertheles whan they wente in to burye her, they founde nothinge of her, but the szkull and the fete, and the palmes of her haudes. And they came agayne and broughte him worde. He saide: This is enen it that the LORDE spake by his seruaunt Elias the Theszbite, and sayde: ${ }^{a}$ In the felde of Iesrael shal the dogges eate Iesabels flesh. |cities, $\boldsymbol{x}$ ordynaunce, Joke which is the best | and most righteous amonge youre lordes sonnes, a set him vpon his fathers seate, and fighte for youre lordes house.

Neuertheles they were sore afrayed, and sayde: Beholde, two kynges were not able to stonde before him, how wyl we then endure? And they that were ouer the house and ouer the cite, and the Elders and tuters sent vnto Iehu, sayēge: We are thy seruauntes, we wyll do all that thou sayest vnto vs: We wil make no man kynge, do thon what pleaseth the. Then wrote he the seconde letter vnto them with these wordes: Yf ye be myne, and herken vito my voyce, then take the heades of the men youre lordes sonnes, and brynge me them tomorow by this tyme unto lesrael.

The kynges sonnes were thre score men and ten, and $\dot{y}$ chefe men of the cite broughte the vp. Now whan this letter came they toke the kynges sonnes, and slewe them euen thre score men and ten, and layed their heades in baszkettes, and sent them to him vnto Iesrael. And whan the messaunger came, at tolde him, and sayde: They have broughte the heades of the kynges children, he sayde: Laye them vpon two heapes at the dore of the porte tyll tomorow.

And on the morow whan he wente forth, he stode, and sayde vnto all the people: Are ye righteous? Beholde, 1 have made an appoyntmēt against my lorde, and slayne him, who hath slayne all these then? Vnderstonde ye now therfore, that there is not fallen vpon the earth one worde of the LORDE, which he spake agaynst the house of Achab: and the LORDE hath done, euen ${ }^{*}$ as he sayde by his seruaunt Elias. So Iehu smote all the remnaunt of the house of Achab at Iesrael, all his greate men, his kynsfolkes, and his prestes, tyll there was not one lefte ouer. And he gat him vp, wente his waye, and came to Samaria.

By the waye there was a shepherdes house, where Iehu founde the brethren of Ochosias kynge of Iuda, and sayde: Whence are ye? They sayde: We are Ochosias brethren, and are goynge downe to salute the kyngeschildren, and the quenes children. He sayde: Take them alyue. And they toke them alyue, and slewe them by the welles syde at the shepherdes house, euen two and fortye men, and let not one of them remayne.

And whan he wente from thence, he foude lonadab ${ }^{\circ}$ sonne of + Rechab, which met him, a saluted him. And he sayde vito him: Is thyne hert righte, as myne hert is with thyne hert? Ionadab sayde: Yee. If it be so (sayde he) then geue me thy handc. And he gaue him his hande. And so he cansed him to syt besyde him in the charet, and saide: Come with me, and se my zele for the LORDE. And they caryed him with him vpon his charet. And whan he came to Samaria, he smote all that remayned of Achab at Samaria, tyll he had destroyed him, acordynge to the worde of the LORDE, $\ddagger$ which he spake vnto Elias.

And lehu gathered all the people together, and saide vnto them: §chab did Baal but litle seruyce, lehu wyll serue him better. Call vnto me now therfore all Baals prophetes, all his seruautes and all his prestes, that there be none wantynge, for 1 have a greate sacrifyce to do vuto Baal. Who so euer is myssed, shal not lyue. But lehu dyd it craftely, that he mighte destroye all the mynisters of Baal. And lehu sayde: Sanctifie è feast whto Baal, and proclane it. And Iehu sent in to all Israel, and caused all Baals ministers to come, so that there was nomà lefte behynde, which came not. And they came in to Baals house, so that the house of Baal was full from one corner to another.

Then sayde he vinto him that had the rule of the vestrye: Brynge forth rayment for all Baals mynisters. And he broughte forth the rayment. And Iehu wente in to Baals house with lonadab the some of Rechab, and sayde vnto Baals mynisters: Search and se that there be not here amoge you eny mynyster of the LORDE, but onely Baals mynisters.

And whan they came in to offer sacrifyces and burntofferynges, lehu appoynted him foure score men without, a sayde: If eny of these men escape whom I delyuer vider youre handes, then shal the same mans soule be for his soule. Now whà he had made an ende of the burntofferynge, Iehu sayde vnto the fotemen and knyghtes: Go in, a smyte euery man, let noman go forth. And they smote the with the edge of the swerde. And the fote men and knightes threw the awaie and wēte vnto the cite of Baals house, and brought forth the piler in $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{g}}$ house of Baal, and brent it, and brake downe Baals pyler with the : 3 Re. 21.c. $\quad$ § 3 Re. 16.d.
house of Baal, and made a preuy house therof vnto this daie. Thus Iehu destroyed Baal out of Israel. But Iehu lefte not of from the simnes of leroboan the sonne of Nebat (which caused Israel to symne) namely, from the golden calues at Bethel and at Dan. And the LORDE sayde vito Iehu: Beeause thou hast bene wyllinge to do that which was righte in my sighte, thast done vnto Achabs house all that was in my hert, * therfore shall thy children syt vpon $y$ seate of Israel unto the fourth generacion.

Neuerthelesse Iehu was not diligent to walke in the lawe of the LORDE God of Israel with all his hert : for he lefte not of fro the symnes of leroboam which made lsrael to synne. At the same time beganne the LORDE to be greued at Israel. + For Hasael smote them in all the borders of Israel from Iordane Eastwarde, and all the londe Gilead of the Gaddites, Rubenites and Manassytes, from Aroer that lyeth on the ryuer by Arnon, and Gilead and Basan.

What more there is to saye of Iehu, and all that he dyd, and all his power, beholde, it is wryten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. And Iehu fell on slepe with his fathers, © they buryed him in Samaria. And Ioahas his sonne was kynge in his steade. The tyme that Iehu reigned ouer Israel, is eight and twentye yeares at Samaria.

${ }^{\text {' }}$ And the rulers ouer the hundreds dyd all as loiada the prest had commanded them, and toke vnto them their men which entred vpon the Sabbath, with those that wente of on the Sabbath, and came to Ioiada ẙ prest. And the prest gaue the captaynes speares and shyldes which had bene kynge Dauids, and were in the house of the LORDE. And the fote men stode aboute the kynge, euery one with his weapen in his hande, frō the corner on the righte syde of the house vnto the corner of the lefte syde, euen vnto the altare and to the house. And he broughte forth the kynges sonne, and set a crowne vpon his heade, and toke the $\ddagger$ witnes, and made him kynge, and they were glad, and elapped their handes together, and sayde: God saue the kynge.
$\$$ And whan Athalia herde the noyse of the people that rame together, she came to the people in to the house of the LORDE, and loked, and beholde, the kynge stode by the piler, as the rse was, and the syngers and tropettes by the kynge: and all the people of ý löde were glad, and blewe with trompettes. But Athalia rente hir elothes, a sayde: Vproure, vproure. N the seuēth yeare of Iehu, was Ioas made kynge, ${ }^{a}$ and reigned fortye yeare at lerusalem. His mothers name was Zibea of Bersaba. And Ioas dyd that which was righte in the sighte of the LORDE, as longe as Ioiada $\mathfrak{y}$ prest taught him. But they put not downe $\hat{y}$ hye places: for the people offred a brent incense yet vpon the hye places.

And loas sayde vnto the prestes: All the money that is sanctified to be bestowed vpo $\hat{y}$ house of the LORDE, namely the money ${ }^{t}$ euery man geueth vnto the treasury, and $\dot{y}$ money that euery man geueth for his soule, and all the money that euery man geueth of a fre hert, to be bestowed on the house of the LORDE, let the prestes take it vnto them, euery one his porcion: with that shall they repayre the decaye in the house of the LORDE, where they fynde that there is eny decaye.

But whan ${ }^{f}$ prestes repayred not the decaye in the house vnto the thre and tweitieth yeare of kynge Ioas, Ioas the kynge ealled Ioiada the prest with the other prestes, and sayde vnto them: Wherfore do ye not repayre the decaye in the house?

Therfore shall ye not take the money vnto you now euery one his poreion, but shall geue it to the decaye of the house. And the prestes agreed to take no money of the people, and to repayre the decaye of the house.

Then Ioiada the prest toke a chest, and bored an hole aboue therin, and set it on the righte hande besyde the altare, at the entrynge in to the house of the LORDE. And the prestes that kepte the thresholde, put all the money therin that was broughte vito the house of the LORDE. Whan they sawe then that there was moch money in the chest, * $\hat{y}$ lynges scrybe came vp with the hye prest, and bounde the money together, and tolle it as moch as was founde in the house of the LOIRDE. And so the ready money was geuen vnto them that wrought and were appoynted to the house of the LORDE, and they gaue it forth to the carpenters and to the that buylded and wroughte in the house of the LORDE, namely, to the dawbers and masons, and to them that boughte tymber and fre stone, to repayre the decaye in the house of the LORDE and all that they founde to haue nede of repayringe in the house.

Howbeit there were no syluer chargers, flat peces, basens, trompettes, ner eny other vessell of golde and syluer made on the house of the LORDE, of the money that was brought vato the LORDES house: but it was geuen vnto the workmen to repayre the decaye in the house of the LOIRDE therwith. The men also that the money was delyuered vnto, for to geue the workmen, neded not to make eny acomptes, but did their busynes vpon credence. But the money of trespace offerynges and symneofferynges was not broughte vuto the honse of the LORDE: for it was the prestes.

At the same tyme wente Hasael the kynge of Syria vp , and foughte agaynst Gath, and wame it. And whan Hasael set his face to go up to Ierusalem, kynge Ioas toke all that was sanctifyed, which his fathers Iosaphat, Ioram and Ochosias the kynges of Iuda had halowed, and what he himselfe had sanctifyed, and all the golde that was founde in the treasures of the house of the LORDE, and in the kynges house, and sent it vinto Hasael the kynge of Syria. As for Elisens, he fell in to a sicknes, wherof he dyed. And loas the kynge of Israel came downe vnto him, and wepte for him, and saide: + My father, my father, the charet man of Israel, and his horsmen. Eliseus sayde vnto him: Take the bowe and the arowes. And whan he had taken the bowe and the arowes, he sayde vnto the kynge of Israel: Bende the bowe with thine hande. And he bent it with his hāde. And Eliseus layed his hande vpon the kynges hande, and sayde: Open that wyndowe towarde the East. And he opened it. And Eliseus saide: Shute. And he shot. He sayde: one arowe of the saluacion of the LORDE, one arowe of saluaciō agaynst the Syrians: and thou shalt smyte the Syrians at Aphek, tyll they be brought to naughte.

And he sayde: Take $\dot{y}$ arowes. And whā he had taken them, he sayde vnto the kynge of Israel: Smyte the earth. And he smote thre tymes and stode still. It is true (O LOlRDE) that the kynges of Assiria haue destroyed the Heythen and their londe with the swerde, and haue east their goddes in the fyre: for they were not Goddes, but $\dot{y}$ worke of més hondes, wodd and stone, therfore have they destroyed them. But now O LORDE helpe thou vs out of his hande, that all the kyngdomes vpon earth maye knowe, that thou LORDE art God alone.

Then sent Esay the somne of Amos rnto Ezeehias, sayenge: Thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: Where as thou hast made thy prayer vnto me concernynge Sennacherib $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ kynge of Assiria, 1 haue herde it. This is it that the LORDE hath spoken agaynst him: He hath despysed $\dot{y}$ and mocked the O virgin thou doughter Sion : he hath shake his heade at the O doughter Ierusalem. $\ddagger$ Whom hast thon despysed a blasphemed? Ouer whom hast thou lifte vp thy voyce? Euē agaynst $\stackrel{g}{y}$

[^322]holy one in Israel hast thou lifte vp thine eyes: thou hast blasphemed $\dot{y}$ LORDE by thy messaungers, and sayde: Thorow the multitude of my charettes have I gone vp to the toppes of the mountayncs, vpon the sydes of Libanus. I haue hewen downe his hye Ceders and his chosen Pyne trees, and am come to the vttemost habitacion of the wod of Carmel that belongeth vnto it. I have dygged and dronke up the straunge waters, and with But hast thou not herde how that 1 haue done this longe agoo, and haue prepared it from the begymnynge? Now haue 1 caused it for to come, that contencious stronge cities mighte fall in to a waist heape of stones, © they that dwell therin, shal be fayute, and fearfull and a shamed, *and shal be as the grasse vpon the felde, and as $\mathfrak{y}$ grene herbe and hay vpon the house toppes, that wythereth afore it be growne yp. I knowe thy habitacion, thy out and ingoynge, and that thou ragest agaynst me. For so moch then as thou ragest agaynst me, and seynge thy presumpcion is come vp to myne eares, therfore wyll I put a rynge in thy nose, and a brydle bytt in thy lippes, and wyll brynge the agayne, cuen the same waye thou camest.

And let this be a token vnto the O Ezechias. In this yeare eate $\frac{t}{y}$ which is fallen, in the seconde yeare soch as groweth of it selfe: In $\mathfrak{y}$ thirde yeare sowe and reape, and plante vynyardes, and eate the frute therof. And the doughter Iuda which is escaped $\mathbb{T}$ remayneth, shall from hence forth take rote beneth, and beare frute aboue. For the remnaunt shal go forth from Ierusalem, © they $\frac{t}{y}$ are escaped, shall go out fro mount Sion. The gelousy of the LORDE Zebaoth shall brynge this to passe.

Therfore thus sayeth the LORDE concernynge ${ }^{\circ}$ kynge of the Assyrians: He shall not come in to this cite, and shall shute no arowe therin, nether shal there come eny shylde before it, nether shall he dygge eny bäcke aboute it, but shal go agayne the waye that he came, and shall not come in to this cite, sayeth the LORDE: and I wyll defende this cite, to helpe it for myne awne sake, and for my seruaunt Dauids sake.
6 And in the same nighte wente the angell of the LORDE, and smote in the hoost of the Assyrians, an hundreth and fyue and foure score thousande men. And whan they gatt them vp in the mornynge, beholde, all laye full of deed coarses. + So Sennacherib the kinge of Assyria brake vp, and departed, and returned, and abode at Niniue. And as he worshipped in $\mathfrak{y}$ house of Nesrach his god, his awne sonnes Adramalech and Sarazer smote him with the swerde, and fled in to $\frac{g}{y}$ londe of Ararat. And Asarhadon his sonne was kynge in his steade.

Tbe fr. Chapter.

AT that tyme was Ezechias deedsicke. ${ }^{a}$ And the prophet Esay $y$ sonne of Amos, came to him, a sayde vnto him: Thus sayeth y LORDE: Set thine house in ordre for thou shalt dye I not lyue. And he turned, his face to the wall, and prayed vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE, and sayde : Remembre (O LORDE) that I haue walked faithfully before the, a with a perfecte hert, and haue done ${ }_{y}^{t}$ which is good in thy syghte. And Ezechias wepte sore. But whan Esay was not gone out of halfe the cite, $\hat{y}$ worde of y LORDE came to him, a sayde: Turne back, a tell Ezechias y prynce of my people: Thus sayeth ${ }^{\circ}$ LORDE God of thy father Dauid: I haue herde thy praier, a considered thy teares. Beholde, I wil heale $\dot{y}$ : on the thirde daye shalt thou go in to $\dot{y}$ house of the LORDE, a fiftene yeares wil I adde vnto thy life, a wyll delyuer the a this cite from the kynge of Assyria, a this cite wil I defende for myne awne sake, and for my seruañt Dauids sake. And Esay sayde: Bringe hither a quantite of fygges. And whan they broughte them, they layed them vpon the sore, and it was healed.

Ezechias sayde vnto Esay: Which is $\mathbf{y}$ token, that the LORDE wyll heale me, and that I shal go vp in to the house of $\dot{y}$ LORDE on the thirde daye? Esay sayde: 'This token shalt thou haue of the LORDE, that the LORDE shal do acordynge as he hath sayde. Shall the shadowe go ten degrees forwarde, or shal it turne ten degrees backwarde? Ezechias sayde: It is an easy thinge for the shadowe to go ten degrees downewarde, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ is not my mynde: but that it go ten degrees backwarde. Then cryed the prophet Esay vnto the LORDE, $\ddagger$ and the shadowe wente backe ten degrees in Achas Dyall, which he was descended afore.
sonne of Baladan kynge of Babilon, sent letters and presentes vnto Ezechias, for he had herde that Ezechias had bene sicke. And Ezechias reioysed with them, a shewed them all the house of rotes, the syluer, golde, spyces, and the best oyle, and the house of ordinaunce, and all that was founde in his treasures. There was nothinge in his house and in all his domynion, but Ezechias shewed it them.

Then came Esay the prophet vnto kynge Ezechias, and sayde vnto him: What haue these men sayde? and whence came they vnto the? Ezechias sayde: They came to me out of a farre countre, euen from Babilon. He sayde: What haue they sene in thyne house? Ezechias sayde: They haue sene all that is in my house, and there is nothynge in my treasures but I haue shewed it them. Then sayde Esay vnto Ezechias: Heare the worde of the LORDE: Beholde, * the tyme commeth, that it shall all be caryed awaye vnto Babilon, and whatsoeuer thy fathers haue layed vp onto this daye, and there shall nothinge be lefte, sayeth the LORDE. +Yee and the ehildren which come of the, whom thou shalt beget, shalbe taken awaye, to be chamberlaynes in the kynge of Babilons palace. Ezechias sayde vnto Esay: It is good that the LORDE hath spoken. And he sayde morouer: Let there be peace yet and faithfulnesse in my tyme.

What more there is to saye of Ezechias, and all his power, and what he dyd, and of the pole and water condyte, wher by he conueyed water in to the cite, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. $\ddagger$ And Ezechias fell on slepe with his fathers, and Manasses his sonne was kynge in his steade.

AND it fortuned, that in $\frac{8}{y}$ nyenth yeare of his reigne, ${ }^{b}$ vpon the tenth daye of the tenth moneth, Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon came with all his power agaynst lerusalem. And they laied sege vnto it, and buylded stronge holdes rounde aboute it. Thus was the cite beseged unto the eleuenth yeare of kynge Sedechias. But on $\mathfrak{y}$ nyenth daye of the fourth moneth ${ }^{c}$ was the honger so stronge in the cite, that the people of the londe had nothinge to eate. And the cite was broken vp, © all the men of warre fled in the night by the waye of the porte betwene the two walles, which goeth to the kynges gardē. But the Caldees laye aboute the cite. And he fled by the waye to the playne felde. Neuertheles the power of the Caldees folowed after the kynge, and toke him in the plaine felde of Iericho: and all the men of warre that were with him, were scatered abrode from him. And they toke the kynge, and led him vp to the kynge of Babilon vnto Reblatha. F And he gaue iudgmēt vpon him. And they slewe Sedechias children before his eyes, and put out Sedechias eies, and bounde him with cheynes, and caryed him vnto Babilon.

Vpon the seuenth daye of the fyfth moneth, that is the ninetenth yeare of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon, came Nabusaradan the chefe captayne the kynge of Babilons seruaunt, vnto Ierusalem, and brent $\mathfrak{y}$ house of the LORDE, and the kynges house, $\mathbb{c}$ all the houses at Iernsalem, and all the greate houses brent he with fyre. And all the power of the Caldees which [^327]was with the chefe eaptayne, brake downe the walles rounde aboute Icrusalem. As for the other people that yet were lefte in the cite, and were falle vuto the kinge of Babilon, and the other comen people, Nabusaradan the chefe captayne caryed them awaye. And of the poorest people dyd the chefe captaine leane in y londe to be wynegardeners and plowmen.

But the brasen pilers in the house of the LORDE, and the seates, and the brasen lauer that was in the house of the LORDE, dyd $\dot{y}$ Caldees breake downe. and caried the metall vuto Babilon. And the pottes, shoucls, fleshokes, spones, $\tau$ all $\dot{y}$ brasen vessell that was occupied in the sernyce, caried they awaye. And $y$ chefe captayne toke awaye $y$ censors and basens ${ }^{t}$ were of golde and syluer, two pilers, one lauer, and the seates $\frac{t^{t}}{y}$ Salomon had made for $\dot{y}$ house of the LORDE. The metall of all these ornamentes coulde not be weved. *Eightene cubytes hye was one piler, and $y$ knoppe theron was of brasse also, t thre cubytes hye: t the rope and the pomgranates spon the knoppe rounde aboute, were all of brasse. Ifter the same maner was the other piler also with the rope.
$\mathbb{C}_{\text {. And the kynge of Babilon slewe

[^328]them at Reblatha in $\mathfrak{y}$ loude of Hemath. Thus was luda caried awaye out of his awne londe. + But ouer the remnaunt of the people in the londe of Iuda, whom Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon lefte behyude, he set Godolias $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ sonne of Ahicam $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Saphan. Now wha all the captaynes of the soudyers, ot the men herde, that the kynge of Babilon had made Godolias gouernoure, they came to Godolias rnto $\ddagger$ Mispa, namely, Ismael $\underset{y}{\mathrm{C}}$ sonne of Nathanias, \& Iohanna $\dot{y}$ soune Carea, I Seraia $y$ sonne of Tanhometh the Netophatite, r Iesanias y sonne of Maechati with their men. And Godolias sware vnto them a to their men, a sayde mnto them: § Feare not ye $\dot{y}$ officers of the Caldees, tary in the londe, t submytte youre selues vnto the kynge of Babilon, a ye shal prospere. I| But in the seufth moneth came Ismael the sonne of Nathanias the sonne of Elisama (of the kynges kynred) and ten men with him, and slewe Godolias, and the lewes and Caldees that were with him at Mispa. Then all the people gat them vp, both small and greate, and the captaynes of the hoost, and came in to Egipte, for they were afrayed of y Caldees.

Howbeit in the seuen and thirtieth yeare after that Ioachim the kynge of Iuda was earied awaye on the seuen and twenty daye of the twolueth moneth, Euilmerodach the kynge of Babilon in the first yeare of his reigne, lifte vp the heade of Ioachim $\mathrm{y}^{\circ}$ kynge of Iuda out of preson, and spake louyngly vnto him, and set his trone aboue $\dot{y}$ trones of ${ }_{y}$ kynges that were with him at Babilon, and chaunged the elothes of his captiuyte. And he ate allwaye before him as longe as he lyued. And he appoynted him his porcion, which was euer geue him daylie of the kynge, as longe as he lyued.

And whan the children of Ammon sawe $\frac{t}{y}$ the Syrians fled, they fled also before Abisai his brother, and wente in to the cite. And loab came to Ierusalem.
B But whan the Syrians sawe that they were smytte before Israel, they sent messaungers, and broughte forth $\hat{y}$ Syrians which were beyonde the water. And Sophach the chefe captayne of Hadad Eser wente before them. Whā this was tolde Dauid, he gathered all Israel together, and wente ouer Iordane. And whan he came at them, he set $\frac{8}{y}$ battayll in araye agaynst them. And Dauid prepared him selfe to $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{g}}$ battayll agaynst y Syrians, a they foughte with him: but $\mathfrak{y}$ Syriās fled before Israel. And Dauid slewe of the Syrians seuen thousande charettes, $\mathbb{a}$ fortye thousande fote men. And Sophach the chefe captayne slewe he also. And whan Hadad Esers seruauntes sawe that they were smytte before Israel, they made peace with Dauid a his seruauntes. And the Syrians wolde helpe the childrē of Ammon nomore.

AND Sathan stode agaynst Israel, ${ }^{b}$ đ entysed Dauid to nombre Israel. And Dauid sayde vnto Ioab a to $\mathrm{y}^{\circ}$ rulers of the people: Go youre waye, nombre Israel from Berseba vnto Dan, and brynge me the nombre of the, that I maye knowe it. Ioab sayde: The LORDE make his people an hundreth tymes mo then they are now. But my lorde O kynge, are they not all my lordes seruauntes? Why doth my lorde then axe therafter? Wherfore shal there a trespace come vpon Israel?

Neuertheles the kynges worde preuayled agaynst loab. And loab wente forth, and walked thorow all Israel, and came to lerusalem, and delyuered into Dauid ẙ nombre of the people that was tolde. And of all Israel there were a thousande tymes a thousande, and an hundreth thousande men, that drue out the swerde: and of Inda foure hundreth thousande and seuc̄tye thousande men, which drue out the swerde. As for Leui and Ben Iamin, he nombred them not amonge these: for the kynges worde was abhominable vnto Ioab.

But this displeased God righte sore: for he smote Israel. And Dauid sayde vnto God: I haue synned greuously, that I haue done this. But now take awaye the trespace of thy seruaunt: for I haue done very vnwysely. And the LORDE spake wnto Gad Dauids Seer, t sayde: Go speake to Dauid, a saye: Thus saieth the LORDE: Thre thinges laye I before the, chose $y^{8}$ one of them, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ I maye do it vuto the. Loke now what answere I shal geue vito him ${ }_{y}^{t}$ sent me. Dauid sayde into Gad: I am in greate trouble: yet wyl I rather fall in to $\hat{y}$ hande of the LORDE, for his mercy is exceadynge greate, 爪 I wil not fall in to the handes of men.

Then dyd the LORDE cause pestilence to come in to Israel, so that there fell of Jsrael thre seore a ten thousaude me. And God sent the angell to Ierusale for to destroye it. And euen in the destruceion the LORDDE considered, and he repeted of the euell, and sayde vito the angell $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ destroyer: It is ynongh, holde now thy hande.

The angell of the LORDE stode besyde ${ }^{\circ}$ barne of Arnan y Iebusite. And Dauid lifte up his eyes, and sawe the angell of $\dot{y}$ LORDE stondinge betwene heaue and earth, and a naked swerde in his hande stretched out ouer Ierusalem. Then Dauid and yf Elders beynge clothed with sack cloth, fell ypo their faces. And Dauid savde mito God: Am not I he that caused the people to be nombred? I am he that hath symned and done euell: as for these shepe, what haue they done? LORDE my God, let thine hande be agaynst me and agaynst my fathers house, and not agaynst thy people to plage them.

And the angell sayde vnto Gad, that he shulde speake vinto Dauid, that Dauid shulde go up, $\tau$ set yp an altare in the barne of Arnan the lebusite. So Dauid wente vp acordinge to $y$ worde of Gad, which he spake in the uane of the LORDE. But whan Arnan turned hin, and sawe the angell (and his foure somes with him) they hyd the selues: for Arnan throszshed wheate.

Now whan Dauid came to Arnan, Arnan loked, and was aware of Dauid, and wète forth out of the barne, and worshipped Dauid with his face to the grounde. And Dauid sayde vnto Arnan: Geue me rowme in the barne, to buylde an altare mnto the LORDE therin: for $\dot{y}$ full money shalt thou geue it me, that the plage maye ceasse from the people.

But Arnan sayde vnto Dauid: Take it vnto the, and let my lorde the kynge do as pleaseth him. Beholde, that oxe geue I for a burntofferynge, and those vessels to the oxe, and wheate for the meatofferynge, I geue it all. Neuertheles the kynge sayde vnto Arnan: Not so: but for $\hat{y}$ full money wyl I bye it: for that which is thine wyl not I take for the LORDE, and offre a burntofferynge for naughte.

So Dauid gaue Arnan for $\mathfrak{y}$ rowme, sixe hundreth Sveles of golde in weight. And there buydded Dauid an altare vnto $\dot{y}$ LORDE, $\tau$ offred burntofferynges a slaynofferynges. F the ordinaūces of the dorekepers. Amonge the Korahytes was Meselemia

Hossa of the children of Merari had children, Simri the chefest: for y fyrstborne was not there, therfore dyd his father appoynte him to be chefest, the secōde Helchias, $\dot{y}$ thirde Tebalia, $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{}$ fourth Zacharias. All the children and brethren of Hossa were thirtene.

This is the ordinaunce of the dorekepers amonge the heades of the valeaunt men in the offyce besyde their brethren, to mynister in the house of the LORDE. And the lot was cast for the small as for $\hat{\mathrm{y}}$ greate thorow out the house of their fathers at euery dore. The lot towarde the East fell ypon Meselemia. And the lot was east for Zacharias his some, which was a man of prudent councell, a moto him it fell towarde the North: But vito Obed Edom towarde the South, and to his sonnes besyde the house of Esupim. And vato Supim and Hossa towarde the West by the gate of Salechet in the strete of the burntofferinges, where the tabernacles stonde together. c Towarde the East were there sixe of the Leuites. Towarde the north foure on $\dot{y}$ daie tyme. Towarde the south foure on the daye season likewyse. Besyde Esupim two a two. By Parbar westwarde were there foure in the strete, and two besyde Parbar. These are the ordinaunces of the dorekepers amonge the chiddren of the Korahites, and the children of Merari. Of the Leuites, was Ahia ouer the treasures of the house of God, and ouer the treasures that were sanetifyed.

Of the children of Laedan, the childre of the Gersonites. Of Laedan were these the heades of the fathers, namely $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ lehielites. The children of the Iehielites were, Sethā and his brother Ioel ouer the treasures of the house of the LORDE. Amonge the Amramites, Iezeharites, Hebronites and Vsielites, was Sebuel the sonne of Gerson the somne of Moses, prynce oner the treasures. His brother Elieser had a some Rehabia, whose sonne was Iesaia, whose sonne was Iorā, whose sonne was Sichri, whose sonne was Selomith : the same Selomith and his brethren were ouer all the treasures of the thinges that were halowed, which kinge Dauid halowed, and the pryncipall of the fathers amonge the rulers ouer thousandes $\rceil$ ouer hundreds, and rulers in the hoost (of warres and spoyles had they halowed it, to repayre the house of the LORDE) and oner all $\frac{i}{y}$ Samuel the Seer, and Saul the sonne of Cis, a Abner the sonne of Ner, and Ioab the sonne of Zeru Ia had halowed: what soener was sanetifyed, it was rnder the hande of Selomith and his brethren. Amonge the Iezeharites was Chenaia with his sonnes for the worke without ouer Israel, offycers a ludges. Amonge the Hebronites was Hasabia t his brethren, valeaunt men, a thousande and seuen hundreth, ouer the offyces of Israel on this syde lordane westwarde for all maner worke of the LORDE, and to serue the kinge.

But amonge the Hebronites was Ieria the chefest amonge the Hebronites of his kinred anōge the fathers. And seareh was made anonge them, and in the fortieth yeare of kynge Dauid there were founde valeaūt men at laeser in Gilead, and their brethren mightie men, two thousande and senen hundreth pryncipall fathers, and Dauid set the ouer the Rubenites, Gaddites, and ouer the halfe trybe of Manasses, for all soch busynes as belonged vnto God and the kynge.

Amonge the Rubenites was Prynce Elieser the sonne of Sichri. Amonge the Simeonites was Sephatia the sonne of Maecha. Amonge the Leuites was Hasabia the sonne of Kemuel. Amonge the Aaronites was Sadoc. Amōge Iuda was Elihu one of Dauids brethren. Amonge Isachar was Amri the sonne of Michael. Amonge Zabulo was Iesmaia the sonne [^341]of Obadia. Amonge Nephtali was Ieremoth the sonne of Asriel. Amonge the children of Ephraim was Hosea the sonne of Asasia. Amonge the halfe trybe of Manasses was Iocl the sonne of Pedaia. Amonge the halfe trybe of Manasses in Gilead was Ieddo the sonne of Zacharias. Amonge Ben Iamin was Iaesiel the sonne of Abner. Amonge Dan was Asareel the sonne of Ieroham. These are the princes of the trybes of Israel.

But Dauid toke not the nombre of them that were twentye yeare olde and there vnder: for the LORDE had promysed to multiplye Israel as the starres of the szkie. $\dagger$ Howbeit Ioab the sonne of Zeruia had begonne to nombre them, and perfourmed it not: for there came wrath vpon Israel for the same cause, therfore came not the nombre in to $\dot{y}$ Cronicles of kynge Dauid.

Ouer the kynges treasures was Asmaueth the sonne of Adiel. And ouer the treasures in the lode, in the cities, vyllages and castels was Ionathan the somne of Vsia. Ouer the huszbandmen to tyll the londe was Esri the sonne of Chelub. Ouer the vynyardes was Simei the Ramathite. Ouer the wyne Cellers and treasures of wyne was Sabdi the Siphimite. Ouer the oyle gardens and Molbery trees in the lowe feldes, was Baal Hanan the Gaderite. Ouer the treasure of the oyle was Ioas. Oner y oxen of the pasture at Saron was Sitari the Saronite. Ouer the oxen in the valleys was Saphath the sonne of Adlai.

Ouer the Camels was Obil the Ismaelite. Ouer the asses was Iehethia the Meronothite. Ouer the shepe was Lasis the Hagarite. All these were rulers ouer kynge Dauids goodes. Iouathan Dauids vnele was of the councell a wyse man and a scrybe. And Iehiel the sonne of Hachmoni was with the kynges children. $\ddagger$ Achitophel also was of the kynges councell. Husai the Arachite was the kinges frende. After Achitophel was Ioiada ẙ sonne of Benaia and Abiathar. As for Ioab, he was the kynges chefe captayne of warre.

AND Danid gathered into Ierusalem all the rulers of Israel, namely ẙ prynces of the trybes, the rulers ouer the courses, which wayted vpon the kynge, the captaynes ouer thousandes and ouer hundreds, the rulers louer the goodes and catell of the kynge and of his sonnes, with the chāberlaines, warryers and valeaunt men. And Dauid the kynge stode rp ypon his fete, and saide: Heare me my brethren and my people: *I was mynded to buylde an house, where the Arke of the conenaunt of the LORDE shulde rest, and a fote stole for the fete of oure God, and prepared my selfe for to buylde, But God sayde vnto me: ${ }^{a}$ Thou shalt not buylde an house vito my name, for thou art a man of warre, and hast shed bloude.
$\dagger$ Now hath the LORDE God of Israel chosen me out of all my fathers house, $\frac{t}{y}$ I shulde be kynge ouer Israel: for $\ddagger$ Iuda hath he chosen to be the Prynce, and in the house of luda amonge my fathers children hath he had pleasure minto me, to make me kynge ouer all Israel: and amōge all my sonnes (for the LORDE hath geuen me many somnes) he hath chosen Salomon my sonne, to syt vpon the seate of the kyngdome of the LORDE ouer Israel, and hath sayde vnto me: §Salomon thy sonne shall buylde me an house and my courtes: for I haue chosen him to be my sonne, © I wil be his father, © wyll stablishe his kyngdome for euer, yf he be constant to do after my commaundementes and lawes, as it is this daye. Now in the sight of all Israel the congregacion of the LORDE, and in the eares of oure God, se that ye obserne and seke all the commaundemētes of the LORDE youre God, that ye maye possesse this good londe and that ye and youre children maie haue $y$ inheritaunce therof for euer.

And thou my sonne Salomē, knowe thou the God of thy father, and serue him with all thy hert, and with the desyre of thy soule: for the LORDE seareheth all hertes, and vnderstondeth all thoughtes a ymaginacions. Yf thou seke him, thon shalt fyide him: but yf thou forsake him, he shall refuse the for euer. Take hede now, for the LORDE hath chosen the, to buylde an house to be the Sāctuary: be stronge, and make it.

And Dauid gaue Salomon his sonne a patrone of the Porche, and of his house, and of the celles and perlers and ynnermer chābers, and of the house of the Mercyseate, a of all that he had in his mynde, namely of the courte of the LORDES house, and of all the oratories rounde aboute the treasures in [^342]$\dot{y}$ house of God, and of the treasures of soch thinges as were halowed, of the ordinaunces of the prestes, and Leuites, and of all $\dot{\circ}$ busynesse of the offyces in the house of the LORDE.

Golde (gaue he him) after ${ }^{\circ}$ golde weight for all maner of vessels of euery offyce, and all siluer ornamentes after the weight for all maner of vessell of euery offyce : and weight for the golden candilstickes and golden lampes, for euery candilstycke and his lampes his weight: likewyse for the siluer candilstickes gane he the weight to the candilsticke a his lampes, acordynge as was requyred for enery candilstycke. He gaue golde also for y tables of the shewbred, for euery table his weight: and syluer lykewise for the syluer tables. And pure golde for the fleshokes, basens and censors: and for the golden cuppes, vnto euery cuppe his weight: and for the siluer cuppes, vnto enery cuppe his weighte: and for the altare of incense his weighte, of the most pure golde.

And a patrone of the eharett of the golden Cherubins, that they mighte sprede out them selues, and couer the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE. All this is geuen me in wrytinge of the hande of the LORDE, to make me vnderstonde all the workes of the patrone.

And Dauid sayde vnto Salomō his sonne: Be thou manly and stronge, and make it, feare not, and be not fayntharted, the LORDE God my God shal be with the, and shall not withdrawe his hande, ner fayle the, tyll thou haue fynished enery worke for the seruyce in the house of the LORDE. Beholde, the courses of the prestes and Leuites to all the offyces in the house of God are with the in euery worke, and are willinge, and haue wisdome to all the offyces: and so haue the prynces and all the people for euery thinge that thou hast to do.

AND kynge Dauid sayde mnto all the congregacion: God hath chosen Salomon one of my somnes, which yet is yonge and tender. But the worke is greate : for it is not a mans palace, but the LORDE Gods. Yet haue I after all my abilite prepared vito the house of God, golde for the vessels of golde, syluer for them of syluer, brasse for them of brasse, yron for the of yron, wod for them of wod, Onix stones, set Rubyes, a stones of dyuerse coloures, a all precions stones, a [^343]Marble stones in multitude. Besydes this, for the good wyl $\frac{t}{y}$ I haue to the house of God, I haue of myne awne proper good thre M. talētes of golde of Ophir, a seuen M. taletes of pure syluer, which I geue vato the holy house of God, besyde all $\frac{t}{y}$ I haue prepared, to ouerlaye $\hat{y}$ walles of the house, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ the same which ought to be of golde, maye be of golde: $\pi$ that it which ought to be of syluer, maye be of syluer: and for all maner of worke by the hande of the craftesmen. And who is now fre wyllinge, to fyll his hande this daye vnto the LORDE?

Then were the prynces of the fathers, $\hat{y}$ prynces of the trybes of Israel, the captaynes ouer thousandes a ouer hundreds, the rulers ouer the kynges busynes, fre wyllinge, a gaue to y mynistracion in the house of God fyue M. talentes of golde, and ten M. guldens, and ten M. talentes of syluer, eightene M. talētes of brasse, and an hundred M. talētes of yron. And by whom so euer were foude stones, they gane them to the treasure of the house of the LORDE, vnder the häde of Iehiel the Gersonite.

And $\stackrel{8}{y}$ people were glad that they were fre wyllinge: for they gaue it with a good wyll (euen with all their hert) vnto the LORDE. And Danid also y kynge reioysed greatly, and praysed God, and sayde before the whole congregacion: Praysed be thou O LORDE God of Israel oure father, vnto the belongeth worshippe and power, glory, victory a thankes: for all that is in heauen and earth, is thine : thine is $\dot{y}$ kyngdome, and thou art exalted abone all prynces. Thine are riches and honoure before $\mathfrak{y}$, thou reignest ouer all, in thy hande consisteth power and might, in thy häde is it to make enery man greate and stronge.

Now thāke we the oure God, and prayse y name of thy glory: For who am I? What is my people? that we shulde be able with a fre wyll to offre, as this is done? For of the commeth all, and of thy hande haue we genen it the: *For we are but pilgrems a strañgers before the, as were all oure fathers. Oure life vpon earth is as a shadowe, and here is no abydinge. O LORDE oure God, all this abundaunce that we haue prepared to buylde the an house vnto thy name, came of thy hande, and is thine alltogether. I knowe my God, that thou tryest the hert, and that in-faynednes is acceptable vuto the: therfore have I gevē all this with an vnfayned hert, eue with a good wyll, and now haue I had ioye to se thy people (which here are present) offre with a fre wyll vuto the. O LORDE God of oure fathers Abraham, Isaac, at Israel, kepe thou euermore soch purposes and thoughtes in $\dot{y}$ hertes of thy people, a prepare thou their hertes into the. And graunte my some Salomon a perfecte hert, that he maye kepe thy comaundementes, thy testimonies, $\pi$ thy statutes, that he maye do all, a buylde this palace, which I haue prepared.

And Dauid sayde vinto the whole cogregacion: O prayse the LORDE youre God. And all the cogregacion praysed $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE God of their fathers, $\pi$ bowed them selues, $\pi$ worshipped the LORDE $\mathbb{\pi}$ then the kynge, and offred sacrifices vnto the LORDE. And on $\mathfrak{y}$ nexte morow offred they burntofferynges, a M. bullockes, a M. rāmes, a M. lābes with their drynkofferynges, $\frac{3}{}$ plenteously offred they amonge all Israel. And they ate and dranke $\dot{y}$ same daie before the LORDE with greate ioye, and made Salomon the sonne of Dauid kynge $y$ seconde tyme, and anoynted him to be $\dot{y}$ prynce for the LORDE, ${ }^{+}$Sadoc to be the prest.
$\ddagger$ Thus sat Salomon vpon the seate of $\dot{y}$ LORDE, kynge in his fathers steade, a prospered. And all Israel obeyed him, a all $\frac{8}{y}$ rulers a mightie men, a all kynge Dauids children submytted themselues mito kynge Salomon. And $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE made Salomon excellent a greate in $\mathfrak{y}$ sighte of all Israel, § and gate him soch a glorious kyngdome, as none had before him ouer Israch.

So had Danid now bene kynge ouer all Israel. And $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ tyme that he was kynge ouer Israel, is fortye yeares: At Hebron reigned he seuen yeare, and at Ierusalem thre $x$ thirtie yeare, $\pi$ dyed in a good age, full of dayes, riches and honoure. And Salomon his sonne was kynge in his steade.

These actes of kynge Dauid (both $\dot{y}$ first and last) beholde, they are wrytten amonge the actes of Samuel the Seer, and amonge the actes of the prophet Nathan, and amoge the actes of Gad the Seer, with all his kyngdome, power and tymes which passed vnder him, both ypon Israel a ypon all the kyngdomes of the earth.

 ND Salomon the some of Dauid was stablyshed in his kyngdome, ${ }^{a}$ and the E his God was with him, © made him exceadinge greate. And Salomon spake vnto all Israel, to the captaynes ouer thousandes and ouer hundreds, to the Iudges, and to all $\dot{y}$ prynces in Israel, and to the chefest fathers, so that they wente (Salomon and the whole congregacion with him) muto the hye place which was at Gibea: * for there was $\dot{y}$ Tabernacle of $\dot{y}$ witnesse of God, $\dagger$ which Moses the seruaunt of the LORDE had made in $\dot{y}$ wyldernesse. $\ddagger$ For Dauid had brought vp the Arke of God from Kiriath Iarim, whan he[^345]had prepared for it: for he had pitched a tent for it at Ierusalem. As for $\hat{y}$ brasen altare $\$$ which Bezaleel the sonne of Tri the sonne of Hur had made, it was there before the habitaof the LORDE: and Salomon and the congregacion soughte God. And Salomon offred a thousande burntofferynges vpō the brasen altare that stode before the Tabernacle of witnesse.

In the same nighte appeared God vato Salomon, and sayde vnto him: Axe, what shal I geue the? And Salomon sayde vnto God: Thou hast done greate mercy vnto my father Dauid, and hast made me kynge in his steade. Now LORDE God, let thy worde that thou hast promysed vnto my father

Beholde, I wyl buylde an house vnto the name of the LORDEmy God, to sanctifie it, for to burne good incense before him, and allwaye to prepare $\hat{y}$ shewbred, and burntofferynges in the mornynge and in the euenynge, on the Sabbathes a New mones, and solempne feastes of ${ }^{\circ}$ LORDE oure God euermore for Israel.

And the honse that I wyl buylde, shal be greate: for oure God is greater then all goddes. But who is able to buylde him an house? For heauen the heauens of all heauens maye not copprehende him. Who am I then, that I shulde buylde him an house? But onely for this intent to burne incense before hin?

Seche me now therfore a wyse mă to worke with golde, syluer, brasse, yron, searlet, purple, yalow sylke and soch one as can graue earued worke with the wyse men that are with me in Iewry and Ierusalem, whom my father Dauid ordeyued. And sende me tymber of Ceder, pyne tre and costly wodd from Libanus: for I knowe that thy seruauntes can hewe tymber vpon Libanus. And beholde, my seruauntes shalbe with thy seruauntes, to prepare me moch tymber: for the house that I wyl buylde, shalbe greate a maruelous goodly.

And beholde, I wyl geue vnto the carpenters thy seruauntes which hewe the tymber, twētye thousande quarters, of beaten wheate, and twentye thousande quarters of barlye, and twentye thousande Batthes of wyne, and twentye thousande Batthes of oyle.

Then sayde Hiram the kynge of Tyre by wrytinge, and sent it vnto Salomon: Because the LORDE loueth his people, therfore hath he made $\dot{y}$ to be kynge ouer them. And Hiram sayde morouer: Praysed be $\dot{f}$ LORDE God of Israel, which made heauen đ earth, that he hath gené kynge Dauid a wyse and prudent some, and soch one as hath vnderstondinge to buylde an house vito the LORDE, it an house for his realme. And now let my lorde sende the wheate, barlye, oyle and wye vnto his seruantes, acorclinge as he hath sayde, and so wyll we hewe $\mathfrak{y}$ tymber vpon Libanus, as moch as thou nedest, and wyll brynge it by flotes in the See vnto Iapho, from whence thou mayest brynge it vp to Ierusalem.

And Salomon nombred all the straungers in the londe of Israel, acordinge to the nombre whan Dauid his father nombred them: and there were founde an hundreth a fiftye thousande, thre thousande and sixe hīdreth. And of the same he made thre score and ten thousande bearers of burthens, and foure score thousande hewers rpo $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ mount, and thre thousande and sixe hundreth ouerseers, which helde $\stackrel{f}{\mathrm{y}}$ people at their worke.

Clye iij. Chapter.

( 1 ND Salomon beganne to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem vpon the mount Moria, * that was shewed vnto Dauid his father, which Dauid had prepared for the rowme, vpon the corne floore of Arnan the Iebusite. In the seconde daye of the seconde moneth in the fourth yeare of his reigne begāne he to buylde. And so layed Salomon the foundacion to buylde the house of God: first the length thre score cubytes, the bredth twentye cubites: and the Porche before the wydenes of the house, was twentye cubites longe, but the height was an hundreth and twentye, and he ouerlayed it on the ynsyde with pure golde.

But the greate house syled he with Pyne tre, and ouerlayed it with the best golde, and made palme trees and throwne worke theron, and ouerlayed the house with precious stones to beutifye it. As for the golde, it was golde of Paruaim. And the balkes and postes aboue, and the walles, and the dores of it ouerlayed he with golde, and caused Cherubins to be carued on the walles.

He made also the house of the Most holy, whose length was twentye cubites acordinge to the wydenesse of the house: and the bredth of it was twentye cubites likewyse, and he ouerlayed it with the best golde by sixe hundreth talentes. And for nales he gaue fiftye Sicles of golde in weight, and ouerlayed the chambers with golde. He made also in the house of the most holy, two Cherubins of carued worke, and ouerlayed them with golde: and the length on the wynges of the Cherubins, so that one wynge had fyue cubytes, and touched the wall of the house: and the other wynge had fyue cubytes also, and touched the wynge of the other Cherub.

Euen so had one wynge of the other Cherub fyue cubites likewyse, and touched the wall of the house: and his other wynge had fyue cubites also, and touched the wynge of the other Cherub: so that these wynges of the Cherubins were spred out twentye cubites wyde. And they stode vpo their fete, and their face was turned to the house warde.

He made a vayle also of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple and lynenworke, and made Cherubins theron. And before the house he made two pilers fyue and thirtie cubites longe, and the knoppes aboue theron, fyue cubytes. And he made throwne worke for the quere, and put it aboue vpon the pilers: and made an hundreth pomgranates, and put them on the wrythren worke. And he set vp the pilers before the temple, the one on the righte honde, and the other on the lefte: and that on the righte honde called he Iachin, and it on the lefte honde called he Boos.

$\mathrm{H}^{1}$E made a brasen altare also, twentye * cubytes longe, and twentye cubytes brode, and ten cubites hye. $\dagger$ And he made a molten lauer ten cubites wyde frō the one syde to the other rounde aboute, and fyue cubytes hye. And a metelyne of thirtie cubites mighte comprehende it aboute. And ymages of Bullockes were vnder it. And aboute the lauer (which was ten cubites wyde) there were two rowes of knoppes, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ were molten withall.

It stode so vpon the bullockes, that thre were turned towarde the north, thre towarde the west, thre towarde the south, and thre towarde the east, and the lauer aboue rpon them, and all their hynder partes were on the ynsyde. The thicknesse of it was an hand bredth, and the edge of it was like the edge of a cuppe, and as a floured rose. And it conteyned thre thousande Batthes.

And he made ten kettels, wherof he set fyue on the righte hande and fyue on the lefte, to waszshe in them soch thinges as belonged to the burntofferynge, that they mighte thrust them therin: but y lauer (made he) for the prestes to wash in.

む) Ten golden candelstickes made he also as they ought to be, and set them in the temple: fyue on the righte hande, and fyue on the lefte. And made ten tables, and set them in the temple: frue on the righte hande, and fyue on the lefte. And made an hundreth basens of golde. He made a courte likewyse for the prestes, and a greate courte, and dores in the courte, and onerlayed $\hat{y}$ dores with brasse. And the lauer set he on the righte syde towarde the south east. And Hiram made cauldrons, shouels and basens.

So Hiram fynished the worke which he made for kynge Salomon in the house of Gord: namely the two pilers with the roundels and knoppes aboue rpon both the pilers, and both the wrythen ropes to couer both the roundels of $\bar{y}$ knoppes aboue rpo the pilers, and the foure hundreth pomgranates on both the wrythe ropes, two rowes of pomgranates on euery rope, to coner the roundels of the knoppes that were aboue vpon the pilers.

He made the stoles also and $\dot{y}$ kettels vpon the stoles, and a lauer, and twolue bullockes there vuder. And pottes, shouels, fleshokes, and all their vessels made Hiram Abif of pure metall for kynge Salomon vuto the house of the LORDE. In the coaste of lordane dyd the kynge cause them to be molten in thicke earth betwene Suchoth and Zaredatha.

And Salomon made all these vessels which were so many, that the weight of $\dot{y}$ metall was not to be soughte out. And Salomon made all the ornamentes for the house of God: namely, the golden altare, the tables and the shewbreds theron, the candelstickes with their lampes of pure golde, to burne before the Quere acordinge to the maner: and the floures and the lampes and the snoffers were of golde, all these were of pure golde.

And the knyues, basens, spones and pottes, were of pure golde. And the intraunce and his dores within unto the Most holy, and the dores of the house of the temple were of golde. Thus was all $\dot{y}$ worke fynished, which Salomon made in the house of the LORDE.

a $\quad$ ND Salomon broughte in all $y_{y}^{t}$ his father Dauid had sanctified, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ namely, syluer and golde, and all maner of ornamentes, and layed them in the treasures of the house of God. *The gathered Salomon all the Elders in Israel together, all $\dot{y}$ heades of the trybes, prynces of the fathers amoge the childre of Israel vnto Ierusale, to brynge vp the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE out of the cite of Dauid, that is Sion. And there resorted vnto the kynge all the men in Israel at the feast, that is in the seuenth moneth, and all $\dot{y}$ Elders in Israel came.

And y Leuites toke the Arke, a broughte it up with the Tabernacle of witnesse, and all the holy vessels that were in the Tabernacle: and 8 prestes and Leuites broughte them vp. As for kynge Salomon and all the cogregacion of Israel that was gathered vnto him before the Arke, they offred shepe and oxen, so many, that no man coulde nombre ner reken them.

Thus the prestes broughte the Arke of $y$ couenaunt of the LORDE vnto hir place in to the quere of the house, euen in to $\dot{y}$ Most holy vader the wynges of the Cherubins, so that the Cherubins spred out their wynges ouer the place of the Arke : and the Cherubins couered the Arke and the staues therof from aboue. And the staues were so longe, $\frac{t}{y}$ the knoppes of them were sene from the Arke before the quere, but on the outsyde were they not sene. And it was there vnto this daye. And there was nothinge in the Arke, saue the two tables, which Moses put therin at Horeb, whan the LORDE made a couenaunt with the childre of Israel, what tyme as they were departed out of Egipte.

And whan the prestes wente out of the Sanctuary (for all $\dot{y}$ prestes that were founde, sanctified them selues, because the courses were not kepte) the Leuites with all those that were vnder Asaph, Heman, Iedithum and their children and brethren, beynge clothed in lynnen, songe with Cymbales, psalteries and harpes, and stode towarde the east parte of the altare, and an hundreth itwentye prestes with them, which blewe with trompettes. And it was, as yf one dyd trompet and synge, as though a voyce had bene herde of praysinge and geuynge thankes vnto the LORDE.

And whan the voyce arose from $\dot{y}$ trompettes, cymbales and other instrumentes of musick, and from praysinge the LORDE (because he is gracious, and because his mercy endureth for euer) the house of the LORDE was fylled on the ynsyde with a clonde, so $\stackrel{t}{y}$ the prestes coulde not stonde to mynister for the clonde: for the glory of the LORDE fylled the house of God.

And the kynge turned his face, and blessed all the congregacion of Israel: for the whole cōgregacion of Israel stode, a he sayde: Praysed be the LORDE God of Israel, which promysed by his mouth vnto my father David, and with his hande hath fuufylled it, whā he sayde: * Sēce the tyme that 1 broughte my people out of the londe of Egipte, 1 haue chosen no cite in all $\dot{y}$ trybes of lsrael, to buylde an house for my name to be there, nether haue I chosen eny man to be prynce ouer my people of Israel. + But Ierusalem haue I chosen, for my name to be there: © Dauid haue I electe, to be prynce ouer my people of Israel. to buylde an house vnto the name of the LORDE God of Israel, the LORDE sayde vnto Dauid my father: Where as thou wast mynded to buylde an house vnto my name, thou hast done well: howbeit thou shalt not buylde the house, but thy sonne which shall come out of thy loynes, shal buylde the house vito my name.
Thus hath y LORDE now perfourmed his worde, that he spake: for I am come up in my father Dauids steade, and syt vpon the seate of Israel, euen as the LORDE sayde, a haue buylded an house vnto the name of $\dot{y}$ LORDE God of Israel, © in it haue I put $\hat{y}$ Arke, wherin is the couenaunt of $\dot{y}$ LORDE, which he made with the childrē of lsrael.

AND whā Salomō had ended his praier, a there fell a fyre from heauen, and cōsumed the burntofferynge and the other offeringes. And the glory of the LORDE fylled the house, so that y prestes coulde not go in to the house of the LORDE, while $\mathfrak{y}$ glory of the LORDE filled $\hat{y}$ LORDES house And all the children of Israel sawe the fyre fall downe, and the glory of the LORDE ouer the house : and they fell on their knees with their faces to the grounde vpon the panement, and worshipped, and gaue thankes vnto the LORDE, because he is gracions, and because his mercy endureth for euer. As for the kynge and all the people, they offred before the LORDE.

For kynge Salomon offred two and twētye thousande bullockes, and an hundreth thousande and twentye thousande shepe, $\pi$ so both the kynge and all the people dedicated the house of God.

But the prestes stode in their watehes, a the Leuites with the musicall instrumentes of the LORDE, which kynge Dauid had caused to make for to geue thankes unto the LORDE, (because his mercy endureth for euer) with psalmes of Dauid thorow their hande. And the prestes blewe trompettes ouer agaynst them, and all Israel stode.

And Salomon halowed the myddelmost courte, which was before the house of the LORDE, for there prepared he the burntofferynges and the fat of the slayne offeringes: for the brasen altare that Salomon made, might not conteyne all the burntofferinges, meatofferynges, and the fat.

* And at the same tyme helde Salomon a feast seuen daies longe, and all Israel with him a very greate congregacion, from He math vuto the ryuer of Egipte, and on the eight daye helde he a conuocacion. For the dedicacion of the altare helde they seuen daies, and the feast seuen dayes also.

But on the thre and twentyeth daye of the seuenth moneth he let the people go vnto their tentes ioyfull and with mery hertes because of all the good, that the LORDE had done vnto Dauid, vnto Salomō, and to his people of Israel.

Thus fynished Salomo the house of $\dot{y}$ LORDE, and the kinges house, and all $\frac{t}{y}$ came in his hert to make in the house of the LORDE, and in his awne house, prosperously. And the LORDE appeared vito Salomon in the nighte season, and sayde vnto him: I haue herde thy prayer + and chosen this place vnto my selfe for an house of sacrifyce.

AND after twentye yeares (wherin Salomon buylded the house of the LORDE and his awne house) he buylded the cyties also which Hiram gaue vnto Salomon, and caused the children of Israel to dwell therin. And Salomon wente vnto Hemath Zoba, and made it stronge, and buylded Thadmor in the wyldernes, and all the cornecyties which he buylded in Hemath. He buylded the vpper and lower Bethoron likewyse, so that they were stronge eities with walles, portes and barres. And Baelath, and all the cornecities which Salomon had, and all the cities of the charettes and of the horse men, and all that Salomon had lust to buylde, both at Ierusalem and vpon Libanus, and in all the londe of his domynion.

All the remnaunt of the people of the 23 Hethites, Amorites, Pheresites, Heuites and Iebusites, which were not of the children of Israel, and their children which they had lefte behynde them in the londe, (whom the children

As for the children of Israel, Salomon made no bondmen of them snto his worke, but they were men of warre, and chefe captaynes, and ouer his charettes $\mathbb{a}$ horsmen. And the chefe of kynge Salomons officers were two hundreth and fyftie, which ruled the people.

And Salomon eaused Pharaos doughter to be fetched up out of the cite of Dauid, in to the house that he had buylded for her: for he sayde: My wyfe shall not dwell in the house of Dauid the kynge of Israel, for it is sanctifyed, in as moch as $\dot{y}$ Arke of the LORDE is come in to it.

Then offred Salomon burntofferynges vnto the LORDE ypon the LORDES altare, which he had buylded before the porche, euery one vpon his daye to offre after the comaundemente of Moses, on the Sabbathes, Newmones $₹$ at the appoynted seasons of the yeare, euen thre tymes, namely in $\dot{y}$ feast of vnleuended bred, in the feast of wekes, $\mathbb{c}$ in the feast of Tabernacles.

And he set the prestes in ordre to their ministracion *acordynge as Dauid his father had appoynted, and the Leuites in their offyces, to geue thankes and to mynister in the presence of the prestes, euery one vpon his daye. And the dorekepers in their courses, euery one at his dore, for so had Dauid the mā of God commaunded.

And they departed not from the kynges commaundement ouer the prestes and Leuites in euery matter and in the treasures. Thus was all Salomons busynesse made ready, from the daye that the foundacion of the LORDES house was layed, tyll it was fynished, so that the house of the LORDE was all prepared.
${ }^{+}$Then wente Salomon vnto Ezeon Geber, and vnto Eloth by the See syde in the londe of Edomea. Happye are thy men, and happie are these thy seruauntes, $\frac{t^{\frac{1}{y}}}{}$ allwaye stonde before the, and heare thy wyszdome. Praysed be the LORDE thy God, which had soch pleasure vnto the, that he hath set the vpon his seate to be kynge vnto the LORDE thy God. Because thy God loueth Israel, to set them vp for ener, therfore hath he ordeyned $\mathfrak{y}$ to be kynge ouer them, that thou shuldest mayntayne iustice and equyte.

And she gaue $\dot{y}$ kynge an hundreth and twentye talentes of golde, 5 very moch spyce ${ }^{1}$ precious stones. There were no mo soch spyces as these that the Quene of riche Arabia gaue vnto kynge Salomō. And Hirams seruauntes and the seruauntes of Salomon, which broughte golde from Ophir, broughte costly tymber also đ precious stones.

And of the same costly tymber dyd Salomon cause to make stares in the house of the LORDE, and the kynges house, and harpes and psalteries for the Musicians. There was no soch tymber sene before in the londe of Iuda. But kynge Salomon gaue the Quene of riche Arabia all that she desyred and axed, a moch more then she had broughte moto the kynge. And she returned, and departed in to hir londe with hir seruauntes.

The golde that was broughte vnto Salomon

[^348]in one yeare, was sise hundreth and sixe and thre score talentes, besydes that $\frac{8}{y}$ chapmen and marchauntes broughte. And all the kynges of the Arabians, and the lordes in ${ }^{\circ}$ londe broughte golde and syluer vito Salomon. Of the which kynge Salomon made two hundreth speares of beaten golde, so $\underset{y}{t}$ sixe hundreth peces of beaten golde came vō one speare : $\tau$ thre hundreth shildes of beaten golde, so that thre hundreth peces of beaten golde came to one shylde : and the kynge put the in the house of the wod of Libanus.

And the kynge made a greate seate of Yuery, and ouerlaied it with pure golde: and the seate had sixe steppes, and a fotestole of golde festened vito the seate, and it had two leanynge postes vpon both the sydes of the seate, and two lyons stode beside the leanynge postes, and there stode twolue Lions poot the syxe steppes on both the sides. In all realmes hath not soch one bene made.

And all kynge Salomons drynkynge vessels were of golde, and all the vessels of the house of the wod of Libanus, were of pure golde: for syluer was rekened nothinge in Salomons tyme. For the kynges shippes wente vpon the See with the seruauntes of Hirā, a came once in thre yeare, and brought golde, syluer, Yuery, Apes and Pecockes.

Thus was kynge Salomon greater then all the kynges vpon earth, in riches and wisdome. And all the kynges of y earth desired (to se) Salomons face, and to heare his wysdome, which God had geuen him in his hert. And they brought him yearly euery mā his present: Iewels of siluer and golde, raymēt, harnesse, spyees, horses and Mules.

And Salomon had foure thousande charethorses, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ and twolue thousande horsmen, and put them in the charet cities, and with the kynge at Ierusalem. And he was lorde oner all the kynges from the water unto the londe of the Philistynes, and to the coaste of Egipte. And the kynge brought it so to passe, that there was as moch syluer at Ierusalem as stones: and as many Ceders, as there were Molbery trees in the valleys. And there were horses broughte vnto him out of Egipte, and out of all countres.

What more there is to saye of Salomon, both of his first and of his last, beholde, it is writte in the Cronicles of the prophet Nathan, ROBOAM wente vito Sichem: for all Israel was come vnto Sichem : ${ }^{b}$ to make him kinge. And Roboam the kynge axed councell at the Elders, which had stonde before Salomon his father whyle he lyued, and he sayde: What is yomre councell, that I maye geue this people an answere? They spake vnto him, and sayde: If thou be louynge rnto this people, and deale gently with them, and geue them good wordes, then shal they allwaye be obedient vinto the. Let euery man of Israel get him to his tent. Loke thou now to thy house Dauid. And all Israel wente vnto their tentes, so that Roboam reigned but ouer the children of Israel that dwelt in the eities of Iuda. And Roboam sent forth Adoram the rentgatherer, but the children of Israel stoned him to death. And kyuge Roboia strengthed himselfe ppon his charet, to flye vnto Ierusalem. Thus fell Israel awaie frō the house of Dauid mnto this daye.

AND whan Roboam came to Ierusalem, he gathered together the house of Iuda and Ben lamin (euen an hüdreth and foure seore thousande chosen men of armes) to fyghte agaynst Israel, that they mighte brynge the kyngdome agayne vnto Roboam. But $\dot{y}$ worde of the LORDE came to Semaia the man of God, and sayde: Speake to Roboam the some of Salomon kynge of luda, and to all Israel $\dot{y}$ are in Iuda and Ben Iamin, and saye: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Ye shal not go vp, ner fyght agaynst youre brethren : let euery man go home agayne, for this is my dede. They herkened vnto the wordes of $\dot{\hat{y}}$ LORDE, and wēte not forth agaynst leroboă. As for Roboā, he dwelt at Ierusalem, and buylded tp the stronge eities in Iuda, namely Beethleē, Ettan, Tekoa, Bethzur, Socho, Adullä, Gath, Maresa, Siph, Adoraim, Laches, Aseka, Zarega, Aialon, and Hebron (which were the fensed eities in Iuda and Ben Iamin) a he made them stronge, and set prynces therin, $\sqrt{6}$ [^349]prouyded them of vytayles, oyle and wyne, and in all cities prepared he shildes and speares, and made them tery stronge. And Iuda and Ben Iamin were vnder him.

The Prestes and Leuites also came vnto is him out of Israel and from all the borders therof, And lefte their suburbes a possession, and came to Iuda vito Ierusalem : for Ieroboam and his somes expelled them, that they shulde not execute the offyee of $\mathfrak{y}$ presthode vnto ẙ LORDE. But for himselfe he foūded prestes to $\dot{y}$ hye places, a to feldedeuels a calues, which he eaused to make. And so strengthed they $\dot{y}$ kingdome of Iuda, and mātayned Roboan the sonne of Salomon thre yeare longe: for they walked in y waye of Danid © Salomon thre yeares.

And Roboam toke Mahelath $\hat{y}$ doughter of leremoth y sonne of Dauid to wife, $₫$ Abihail the doughter of Eliab y sonne of Isai, which bare him these somnes: Ieus, Semaria © Saham. After her toke he Maecha the doughter of Absalom, which bare him Abia, Athai Sisa and Selomith. And Roboam set Abia the sonne of Maecha to be heade and prynce amonge his brethren: for he thoughte to make him kynge: for he was wyse, © more mightie then all his sonnes in all the countrees of luda a Ben lamin, and in all the stronge cities. And he gaue them plenteousnes of fode, and desyred many wyues

BUT whā the kyngdome of Roboam was confirmed and stablyshed, he forsoke the lawe of the LORDE a all Israel with him. And in the fyfth yeare of Roboam wēte Sisaek the kynge of Egipte vp agaynst Ierusalem (for they had transgressed agaynst the LORDE) with a thousande and two hundreth charettes, and with thre score thousande horsmen, and the people were imnumerable that came with him out of Egipte, Libya, Suehim a out of Ethiopia, and he wanne the stroge cities that were in luda, and came to Ierusalem.

Then cane Semaia ẙ prophet snto Roboam and to y rulers of luda (which were gathered together at lerusalem for Sisack) $\tau$ sayde vuto them: Thus sayeth $\dot{y}$ LORDE: ie haue lefte me, therfore have I lefte you also in Sisacks hande. The the rulers in Israel with the kynge subnytted them selues, and sayde: The LORDE is righteous.
But whī the LORDE sawe $\frac{t}{y}$ they hūbled them selues, $\hat{y}$ worde of the LORDE came to Semaia, r sayde: They haue humbled them selues, therfore wyl I not destroye them, but 1 wyl geue them a litle delyueraunce, that my indignacion fall not vpon Ierusalem by Sisack: for they shalbe subdued vito him, $\frac{y}{y}$ they maye knowe what it is to serue me, s to serue the kyngdomes of the worlde.
Thus wēte Sisack the kynge of Egipte vp to lerusalem, a toke the treasures in the house of the LORDE, a the treasures in the kynges house, and caried all awaye, and toke the shyldes of golde, * that Salomion caused to make : in steade wherof kynge Roboā made shyldes of stele, and comnytted the vato the chefe fotemen, which kepte the dore of the kynges house. And as oft as the kynge wente in to the house of the LORDE, $\dot{y}$ fote men came $\tau$ bare them, $\llbracket$ brought them againe in to $\hat{y}$ fote mens chäber. And for so moch as he submytted himselfe, $\hat{y}$ wrath of $\hat{y}$ LORDE turned frō him, so that all was not destroied: for there was yet some good in Iuda.

Thus was Roboam the kinge stablished in Ierusalem, and reigned. One and fortye yeare olde was Roboam whā he was made kynge, and reigned seuentene yeare at lerusalem in the cite, +which the LORDE had chosen out of all the trybes of Israel, to set his name there. His mothers name was Naema an Ammonitisse: and he did cuell, and prepared not his hert to seke the LORDE.

These actes of Roboam, both fyrst and last, are wrytten in the actes of Semaia the prophet, $\mathbb{\pi}$ of Iddo the Seer, and are noted, a so are the warres that Roboam and Ieroboam had together as longe as they lyued. And Roboam fell on slepe with his fathers and was buryed in the cite of Dauid, © Abia his sonne was kynge in his steade.

And Abia prepared himselfe to the battayll with foure hūdreth thousande stronge chosen men of warre. But leroboam made himselfe ready to fight agaynst him with eight huudreth thousande chosen men of strength.
And Abia gatt him vp vpon the hyll Zemaraim, which lyeth vpon mount Ephraim and sayde: Herken vnto me thon leroboam and all Israel: Knowe ye not that the LORDE God of Israel hath geuen Dauid $\begin{gathered}\circ \\ \text { kyngdome }\end{gathered}$ of lsrael for euer, wito him and his somes with a Salt couenaunt? And there resorted vnto him ragaboundes and children of Belial, and haue strengthed them selues against Roboà the sonne of Salom ${ }^{\text {: }}$ : for Roboam was but yonge and of a fearfull hert, and coulde not resiste them.

Now thinke ye to set youre selues against the kyngdome of the LORDE amonge the sonnes of Dauid, for so moch as there is so greate a multitude of you, © hane $\mathfrak{y}$ golden calues $\ddagger \frac{\ddagger}{y}$ leroboam mate you for goddes. § Hane ye not expelled the prestes of the LORDE the children of Maron and the Lenites? and hane made you prestes of youre awne, enen as the people of the londes? Neuertheles Ieroboam made a preuy watch on euery syde, to come vpon them behynde, so that they were before luda, and $\frac{8}{y}$ preny watch behynde. And the children of Israel fled before Iuda, and God gaue them in to their handes, so that Abia this people dyd a greate slaughter ypon them, and there fell wounded of Israel fyue hundreth thousande chosen men.

Thus were the children of Israel subdued at that tyme, but the ehildren of luda were comforted, for they put their trust in $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ LORDE God of their fathers. And Abia folowed spon leroboam, and wanne cities fro him, Bethel with the ryllages therof, Iesana with hir vyllages, and Ephron with the villages therof, so that Ieroboam came nomore to strength, as longe as Abia lyued. AND losaphat had greate riches and ${ }^{\boldsymbol{a}}$ worshippe, and made frendshippe with Achab. *And after two yeares wente he downe to Achab vnto Samaria. And Achab eaused many shepe and oxe to be slayne for him and for $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ people that were with him. And he counceled him to go up suto Ramoth in Gileard. And Achab the kynge of Israel sayde ruto Iosaphat the kynge of Iuda: Go with me vnto Ramoth in Gilead. He sayde vuto him: 1 am as thou, and my people as thy people, we wyll go with the vnto the battayll.

But losaphat sayde vnto the kynge of Israel : Axe comncell (I praye the) this daye at the worde of the LORDE. And the kynge of lsrael gathered the prophetes together, euen foure hundreth men, $\tau$ saide vnto them: Shal we go to the battarll vnto Ramoth in Gilead, or shal I let it alone"? They sayde: Go rp, God shal delyuer it in to the kyinges haide. But losaphat sayde: Is there not yet one prophet of the LORDE here, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ we maye axe at him: The kynge of Israel sayde vito Iosaphat: There is yet one man, at whom we maye axe of $\dot{y}$ LORDE: but I hate him, for he prophecieth me no good, but allwaye euell, namely Nicheas the sonne of Iemla. Iosaphat sayde: Let not the kynge saye so. And the kynge of Israel called one of his chamberlaynes, a sayde: Brynge hither soone Micheas the some of lemla.

And the kynge of lsrael, and Iosaphat the kynge of luda, sat either of them ypon his seate, arayed in their garmentes. Euen in the place at the dore of the porte of Samaria sat they, and all $\dot{y}$ prophetes propheeied before them. And Sedechias the sonne of Cnaena * 3 Re. 22. a.

And all the prophetes prophecied likewyse, a sayde: Go up vito Ramoth in Gilead, and thou shalt prospere, and $\dot{y}$ LORDE shal delyuer it in to the kynges hande.
And the messaunger that wente to call Micheas, spake vato him, and sayde: Beholde, $\mathfrak{y}$ wordes of the prophetes are with one acorde good before the kynge: let thy worde (I praye the) be as one of theirs, and speake thou good also. But Mieheas sayde: As truly as the LORDE Iyueth, loke what my God sayeth vnto me, $\dot{y}$ wyl I speake. And whan he came to the kynge, the kynge sayde vnto him: Micheas, shulde we go vnto Ramoth in Gilead to the battayll, or shulde we let it alone? He saide: Go vp, and ye shal prospere. It shal be gene you in youre handes. But $\mathfrak{y}$ kynge sayde vato him: 1 charge $\dot{y}$ yet agayne, that thou tell me nothinge but $\dot{y}$ trueth in the name of the LORDE.

Then saide he: 1 sawe all Israel seatered abrode vp $\bar{o}$ the mountaynes, as the shepe $\overline{\hat{y}}$. haue no shepherde. And the LORDE sayde: Haue these no lorde? Let euery one turne home agayne in peace. Thē sayde the kynge of Israel vito losaphat: Dyd not I tell the, y he wolde prophecie me no good, but euell?

And he sayde: Therfore heare ye the worde of the LORDE: *1 sawe the LORDE syt vpon his seate, and all the hoost of heauen stondinge at his righte hande $\mathbb{c}$ at his lefte. And the LORDE sayde: Who wyll diseeaue Achab the kynge of Israel, that he maye go vp If fall at Ramoth in Gilead? And whan one sayde thus, another so, there came forth a sprete, and stode before $\hat{y}$ LORDE, and sayde: I wyl disceaue him. The LORDE sayde vnto him: Wherwith? He sayde: l wyll go forth, and be a false sprete in the mouth of all his prophetes. And he sayde: Thou shalt disceaue him, and shalt be able: go thy waye, and do so. Beholde now, the LORDE hath geuen a false sprete in the mouth of all these thy prophetes, and the LORDE hath spokee euell agaynst the.

Micheas saide: If thou conimest agayne in peace, then hath not the LORDE spoken thorow me. And he sayde: Herken to all ye people.

So the kynge of Israel, and losaphat $\dot{y}$ 汽 kynge of luda wente vp vntg Ramoth in Gilead. And $y$ kynge of lsrael sayde vinto losaphat: Chaunge thy elothes, and come to the battayll in thine araye. And $\hat{y}$ kynge of 1srael chaunged his raynent, a came in to the battayll. But the kynge of Syria had commaunded the rulers of his charettes: Ye shal fighte nether agaynst small ner greate, but onely agaynst the kynge of Israel.

Now whan the rulers of the charrettes sawe Iosaphat, they thoughte: It is $\hat{y}$ kynge of 1srael, and they wēte aboute to fighte agaynst him. But losaphat eryed, and the LORDE helped him. And God turned them from him: for whan the rulers of the charettes sawe that it was not $\hat{y}$ kynge of Israel, they turned back from hiin. But a certayne man bended his bowe harde, © shot the kynge of Israel betwene the mawe and the longes. O oure God, wylt thou not iudge them? For in vs is no strength to withstonde this greate muititude that commeth agaynst vs. We knowe not what we shulde do, but oure eyes loke mnto the. And all luda stode before the LORDE, with their children, wyues and somnes.

But ypon Iehasiel the sonne of Zacharias, the somne of Benaia, the sonne of Iehiel, the sonne of Mathania the Leuite of $\mathfrak{y}$ children of Assaph, eame the sprete of the LORDE in the myddes of the congregacion, and sayde: Geue hede all thou Iuda, and ye inhabiters of Ierusalem, and thou kynge Iosaphat: Thus sayeth the LORDE mnto you: Be not ye afrayed, nether feare ye this greate multitude: for it is not ye that fighte, but God. ${ }^{2} \mathrm{~F}$TYE and twentye yeare olde was Amasias whan he was made kynge, and reigned nyne and twentye yeare at lerusalem. His mothers name was loadan of Ierusalem. And he dyd $\stackrel{t}{y}$ which was right in the sighte of the LORDE, but not with a whole hert. Now whan his kingdome was in strēgth, he slewe his seruaūtes which had slayne the kinge his father. But their childre slewe he not, for so is it wrytten in the boke of the lawe of Moses, *where the LOR DE comaundeth, and sayeth: The fathers shal not dye for the children, nether shal the children dye for the fathers: but euery one shal die for his awne synne.

And Amasias broughte Iuda together, and set them after the fathers houses, after the rulers ouer thousandes a ouer hundreds amonge all Iuda and Ben Iamin, and nombred them from twentye yeare olde © aboue, and founde of the thre hundreth thousande chosen men, which were able to go forth to the warre, and earyed speares and shyldes. And out of 1srael appoynted he an hundreth thousande stronge men of warre for an hundreth talentes of siluer.

But there came a man of God vnto him, and sayde: O kynge, Let not the hoost of Israel eome with the: for the LORDE is not with Israel, nether with all the childre of Ephraim. For yf thou commest to shewe thy boldnes in the battaill, God shal make the fall before thine enemies. For God hath power to helpe, and to cause for to fall. Amasias sayde vnto the man of God: What shal be done then with $\dot{y}$ hundreth talentes $\dot{t}_{\mathrm{y}}$ I haue geue y soudyers of Israel? The mā of God sayde: The LORDE hath yet more the this to geue the. So Amasias separated out the men of warre which were come to him out of Ephraim, ${ }^{\frac{t}{t}}$ they shulde departe vnto their place. Then waxed their wrath very whote agaynst luda, and they wente agayne unto their place in wrothfull displeasure. And Amasias streegthed himselfe, and earied ont his people, and wente forth in to the Salt valley, and smote ten thousande of the children of Seir.

And the childre of Iuda toke ten thonsande of the alyue, whom they broughte rp to the toppe of a mountayne, and cast the downe headlinges from the toppe of the mount, so that they all to barst in sunder. But ${ }^{\circ}$ childrē of the men of warre whom Amasias had sent awaye agayne (that they shulde not go to the battayll with his people) fell in to the eities of Iuda, from Samaria vnto Beth Horon, and smote thre thousande of me, and toke moch spoyle.

And whan Amasias came agayne from the $\mathbb{C}$ slaughter of the Edomites, he broughte the goddes of the children of Seir, and made them his goddes, and worshipped before them, $\pi^{\prime}$ brent incense who them. Then was the LORDE very wroth at Amasias, $\tau$ sent moto him a prophet, whieh sayde vuto him: Why sekest thou the goddes of the people, which eoulde not delyuer their folke from thy hande? And whan he talked with him, the kynge sayde vnto him: Hate they made $\dot{y}$ of the kynges councell? Ceasse, why wilt thou be smytten? Then the prophet ceassed, a sayde: I perceane, that the LORDE is mynded to destroye $\dot{y}$, because thou hast done this, and herkenest not vnto my councell.
${ }^{\text {a }}$ And Amasias $\mathrm{y}^{\circ}$ kynge of luda toke conieell, a sent unto loas the somne of loahas $\hat{y}$ sonne of Iehu, kynge of Israel, sayege : Come, let vs se one another. But loas the kynge of Israel sent vnto Amasias $\dot{y}$ kynge of luda, sayenge: The hawthorne in Libanus sent vnto $\frac{\mathrm{\circ}}{}$ Cedre tre in Libanus, sayēge: Geue thy doughter rnto my sonne to wife. But a wylde beest in Libanus ranne ouer ${ }^{\circ}$ hawthorne, a trode it downe. Thou thinkest: Beholde, I haue smytten the Edomites, therfore is thine hert proude to boaste. Now byde at home: why stryuest thou after mysfortune, that thou mayest fall $\tau$ Iuda with the?

Neuertheles Amasias consented not: for so was it broughte to passe of God, $\frac{t}{y}$ they mighte be geuen in to the handes of the enemies, beeause they soughte the goddes of y Edonites. Then wente loas the kynge of Israel rp, $x$ they sawe one another, he and Amasias the kynge of luda, at Beth Semes which lyeth in luda. But Iuda was smyttē before Israel, and they fled enery one vnto his tent.

And Ioas the kynge of Israel toke Amasias $\dot{y}$ kynge of Inda, the some of Ioas $\hat{y}$ sonne of Ioahas, at Beth semes, a broughte him to Ierusalem, a brake downe the wall of Ierusale, from $\dot{y}$ porte of Ephrain vnto the corner porte, ené foure hundreth cubites longe : and toke with him all the golde, and siluer, and all the ornamentes that were foulde in y house of God with Obed Edom, and in the treasures in the kynges house, and the childre to pledge mnto Samaria. And Amasias the sonne of Ioas kynge of luda, lined after the death of Ioas the some of Ioahas kynge of Israel fiftene yeare.

What more there is to saye of Amasias (both the first and last) beholde, it is written in $y$ boke of the kynges of Iuda a Israel. And fro the tyme forth that Amasias departed from the LORDE, they conspyred against him at lerusalem. But he fled vnto Lachis. Thē sent they after him moto Lachis, a slewe him there. And they brought him vpō horses a buried him beside his fathers in the cite of Iuda.

The rrbi. Chapter.

$\mathfrak{A}$ THEN all the people of luda toke Osias, ${ }^{a}$ which was syxtene yeare olde, and made him kynge in steade of his father Amasias. He builded Eloth, a broughte it agayne voto Iuda, after that the kynge was fallen on slepe with his fathers. Sixtene yeare olde was Osias whan he was made kinge, and reigned two and fiftie yeare at Ierusale. His mothers name was Iechalia of Ierusalem. And he did right in the syght of the LORDE, as his father Amasias had done, and soughte God as longe as Zacharias lyued, which taughte in the visyons of God: and as longe as he sought the LORDE, God made him to prospere.

For be wente forth, and foughte agaynst the Philistynes, and brake downe $\dot{y}$ walles of Gath, and the walles of labne, and the walles of Aszdod, and buylded cities aboute Aszdod, a amonge the Philistynes. For God helped him agaynst the Philistines, against the Arabians, agaynst them of Gur Baal, a agaynst the Meunites. And $\frac{1}{y}$ Ammonites gaue Osias presentes, $a$ his name came in to Egipte: for he was exceadinge stronge. And Osias buylded towres at lerusalem vpon the cornerporte, and on the valley gate, and on other corners, and made them stronge. He buylded castels also in the wyldernesse, and dygged many welles: for he had many catell, both in the medewes and in the playnes, huszbandmen also and wynegardeners on the mountaynes and on Carmel : for he delyted in huszbandrye.

And Osias had an hoost of men of warre goynge forth to the battaill, which were nöbred vader the hande of Ieiel the scrybe a of Maesa the offycer, vnder the häde of Hanania of the kynges rulers. And the nombre of the chefe fathers amonge the stronge mē of warre, was two thousande and syxe hundreth. And voder the hande of the hoost thre hundreth thousande, and senen thousande and fyue hundreth mete for the battayll, in the strength of an armye to helpe the kinge agaynst the enemies. And Osias prepared for all the hoost, shyldes, speares, helmettes, brestplates, bowes and slyngstones. And at Ierusale he made ordinaunce coningly, to be vpon the towres and in the pynnacles, to shute arowes and greate stones. And the fame of him came farre abrode, because he was specially helped, tyll he became mightie.

And whan his power was greate, his hert arose to his awne destruccion: for he trespaced agaynst the LORDE his God, and wente in to the temple of the LORDE, to burne incense vpon the altare of incense. But Asarias the prest wente after him, and foure score prestes with him, valeaunt men, and withstode kynge Osias, and saide vnto him: *It belongeth not vnto thy offyce (Osias) to burne incense vnto the LORDE, but vnto the prestes belongeth it, euen vnto the children of Aaron, which are halowed to burne incense. Go forth out of the Sanctuary: for thou offendest, and it shall be no worshippe vnto the before God the LORDE.

And Osias was wroth, and had a censoure in his hande. ${ }^{\text {b }}$ And whyle he murmured with the prestes, the leprosy spronge out of his foreheade in the presence of the prestes in [^358]the house of the LORDE before the altare of incense. And Asarias the chefe prest turned his heade towarde him, and so dyd all the prestes, and beholde, he was leper in his foreheade. And they put him out from thence. Yee he made haist himselfe to go forth, for his plage came of the LORDE. Thus became Osias y kynge a leper vnto his death, and dwelt full of leprosye in a fre house: for he was put out of the house of the LORDE. But Ioram his sonne had the ouersight of the kynges house, and iudged the people in the londe.

What more there is to saie of Osias (both first and last) Esay the sonne of Amos hath wrytten it. And Osias fell on slepe with his fathers, and they buryed him with his fathers in the pece of grounde beside y kynges sepulcres: for they sayde: He is leporous. And Iotham his some was kynge in his steade.

He buylded the hye porte of the house of $\hat{y}$ LORDE, and on the wall of Ophel buylded he moch, and buylded the cities vpon the mountaynes of Iuda, and in the woddesbuylded he castels and towres.

And lie fought with the kinge of the children of Ammon, and ouercame them, so that the childrē of Ammon gaue him y same yeare an hundreth talentes of siluer, ten thousande quarters of wheate, and ten thousande of barlye. So moch dyd the children of Ammon geue him also in $\dot{y}$ seconde at thirde yeare. Thus became Iotlam mightye, for he gyded his wayes before the LORDE his God.

What more there is to saye of Iotham, a all his warres, and his waies, beholde, it is wrytten in $\hat{y}$ boke of the kinges of Israel $\mathfrak{a}$ luda. Fyue and twentye yeare olde was he whan he was made kynge, © reigned sixtene yeare at Ierusalè. A CHAS ${ }^{b}$ was twentye yeare olde whan he $\mathfrak{a}$ was made kynge, and reigned sisteue yeare at Ierusalem, and dyd not that which was righte in the sighte of the LORDE, as did Dauid his father, but walked in the wayes of the kinges of Israel, and made molten ymages vnto Baalim, and brent incense in the valley of the children of Hennon, aud 'brēt his awne sonnes in y fire, after the abhominacions of the Heithen, whō the LORDE expelled before the childrē of Israel. And he dyd sacrifice and brent incense vpon the hye places and vpon the hilles, and amoge all grene trees.

Therfore dyd the LORDE his God delyuer him in to the hande of the kynge of Syria, so that they smote him, and caryed awaye a greate multitude of his men presoners, and broughte them to Damascon. He was geuen also vnder the hande of the kynge of Israel, so $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ he dyd a greate slaughter vpon him. For Pecah the sonne of Romelia smote in Iuda an hundreth © twentye thousande in one daye (which all were valeaunt men) euē because they had forsaken y LORDE God of their fathers. And Sichri a mightie mā of Ephraim slewe Maeseia y kinges sonne, a Asrikam the prynce of the honse, at Elkana the nexte vuto the kynge. And the children of Israel caried of their brethren presoners two hundreth thousande, wemen, somies and doughters, and toke a greate spoyle from them, and broughte the spogle vnto Samaria.

But eue there was there a prophet of $\dot{y} \mathbf{z}$ LORDE, whose name was Obed, which wēte out to mete $\mathfrak{y}$ hoost that cane to Samaria, and sayde vnto them: Beholde, because the LORDE God of youre fathers is wroth at luda, therfore hath he geuen them ouer in to youre handes: but ye haue slayne them so abhominably, that it is come vnto heaue. Now thinke ye to subdue the children of Iuda and Ierusalem, to be bondmen and bondmaydens vnto you. Is not this a trespace then with you agaynst the LORDE youre God? Herken now vnto me, and sende $\mathfrak{y}$ presoners hence agayne, whom ye haue caried awaye from youre brethren : for the wrath of $\dot{\circ}$ LORDE is fearce ouer you.
Then gat vp certayne of the chefe of the children of Ephraim, Asarias the sonne of

So the hoost lefte the presoners a the spoyle before ${ }^{\circ}$ rulers and before the whole cogregacion.
(c) Then stocle vp the men (which now were rehearced by name) and toke the presoners, and as many as were naked amonge them, clothed they with $f$ spoyles, a deckte them, and put shues rpon their fete, and gaue the to eate and drynke, and anoynted them, and caried them ypon asses (as many as were feble) and broughte them to Iericho to $\dot{y}$ Palme cite vnto their brethren, and came agayne to Samaria. * At the same tyme sent kynge Achas monto the kynges of Assur, $\frac{t}{y}$ they shulde helpe him. And the Edomites came agayne, and smote luda, and caried some awaye captyue. The Philistynes also fell in to the cities in the playne, $\mathfrak{c}$ towarde f south parte of Iuda, a wanne Beth Semes, Aialon, Gederoth, and Socho with the vyllages therof, Timna with the vyllages therof, a Gimso with the vyllages therof, and dwelt therin. For $\hat{y}$ LORDE subdued Iuda for Achas sake $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ kynge of Inda, because he made Iuda naked, and rebelled agaynst the LORDE. And Teglatpilnesser the kynge of Assur came agaynst him, and beseged him, a he was not mightie ynough for bim.

For Achas spoyled the house of the LORDE, and the kynges house, and of the rulers, to geue vnto $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ kynge of Assur, but it helped hin not. Morouer kinge Achas trespaced yet more against the LORDE cuen in his trouble, and dyd sacrifyce vito the goddes of them of Damascon, which had smitten him, a sayde : The goddles of the kynges of Syria helpe them, therfore wil I offre vito them, that they maye helpe me also, where as the same yet were a fall wito him and to all Israel.

And Achas gathered the vessels of $\mathfrak{y}$ house of Gool together, and brake the vessels in y house of Cool, $\tau$ thut the dores of the house of ${ }^{\circ}$ LORDE, and made him altares in all

Then rose the Leuites: Mahath the sonne of Amasai, and Ioel the sonne of Asaria of the children of the Kahathites. Of the children of Merari: Cis the some of Abdi, « Asaria the sonne of Iehaleleel. And they gathered their brethren together, and were sanctified, and wente in acordinge to the kynges commaundement at the worde of the LORDE, to clense the house of $\hat{y}$ LORDE. And the prestes entred within in the house of the LORDE to purifye, and put out all the vuclennes that was founde in the teple of the LORDE, in the courte of the LORDES house: and the prestes toke it vp, and earyed it out in to the broke Cedron. And it pleased the kynge well and all the engregacion. And they appointed it to be proclamed thorow out all Israel from Berseba vinto Dan, that they shulde come to kepe Passcouer vito the LORDE God of Israel: for they were not many to kepe it as it is wrytten.

And the postes wente with the letters from the hande of the kynge and of his rulers thorow out all Israell and Iuda, at $\mathfrak{y}$ kynges commaundement, and sayde : Ye children of Israel, turne you vnto the LORDE God of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, and he shal turne to $\mathfrak{y}$ escaped, which are lefte ouer amonge you from the hande of the kynge of Assur: and be not ye as youre fathers and brethren, whieh rebelled agaynst the LORDE God of their fathers, and he gaue the ouer in to desolacion as ye se youre selues. Be not ye hardneeked now as were youre fathers, but offre youre hade unto the LORDE, and come to his sanctuary, whieh he hath sanctified for euer, and serue the LORDE youre God, of so shal the indignacion of his wrath turne awaye from you. For yf ye turne rnto the LORDE, then shal youre brethren and children haue mercy in the sighte of them which holde them in captiuyte, that they maye come agayne in to this londe : for the LORDE youre God is gracious and mercifull, and shal not turne awaye his face from you, yf ye conuerte rnto him.

[^360]And the postes wente from one eite tol another in the londe of Ephraim and Manasses, and into Zabulon. But they moeked them and laughed them to scorne. Yet were there some of $\mathbf{A s s e r}$ and Manasses, and of Zabulon, that submytted them selues, and came to lerusalem. And the hande of God came in to Iuda, so that he gaue the one hert to do after the commaundement of the kynge and the rulers at the worde of the LORDE. And there came together vnto Ierusale a greate people, to kepe the feast of vnlenended bred in the seconde moneth, a very greate congregacion.

And they gat them vp , and put downe $\frac{8}{y}$ $\ddagger$ altares that were at Ierusalem, and all the incense put they awaye, and cast it in to the broke Cedron, and slewe the Passeouer on the fourtenth daye of the secōde moneth. And ${ }^{\circ}$ prestes and Leuites were ashamed, and halowed them selues, and broughte the burntofferynges to the house of the LORDE, and stode in their ordinaunce, as it was acorelinge, after the lawe off Moses the man of God. And the prestes sprenkled the bloude from the hande of the Leuites: for there were many in the cogregacion which were not sanctified, therfore dyd the Leuites kyll Passeouer for them which were not elensed, that they mighte be sanctified unto the LORDE.

There were many people also of Ephraim, Manasses, Isaehar and Zabulon, which were not cleane, but ate the Easter lambe not as it is wrytten: for Ezechias prayed for them, and sayde: The LORDE, which is gracious, shalbe mereifull vnto all them that prepare their hertes vnto God, to seke the LORDE God of their fathers, though they be not clensed after the holy purificacion. And the LORDE herde Ezechias, and healed the people. Thus the children of Israel that were founde at Ierusale, helde $\dot{y}$ feast of mnleuended bred seuen dayes with greate ioye. And the Leuites and prestes praysed the LORDE euery daye with the loude instrumentes of the LORDE. And Ezechias spake hertely vnto all $\underset{y}{\circ}$ Leuites, which had good nuderstondinge in the LORDE, and they ate the feast seuen dayes, and offred thākofferynges, and gaue thankes vnto $\hat{y}$ LORDE God of their fathers.

And all the congregacion deuysed to kepe
the feast yet other seuē dayes, and so they helde it those seuen dayes also with ioye: for Ezechias the kinge of Iuda gaue an Heueofferynge for the cögregacion, euen a thousande bullockes, and seuen thousande shepe. But the rulers gaue an Heueofferinge for $\dot{y}$ congregacion, euen a thousande bullockes, and ten thousande shepe. And many of the prestes sanctified them selues.

And the whole congregacion of Iuda reioysed, the prestes and Leuites, and all the congregacion that came out of Israel, and the straungers that were come out of the londe of Israel, and they that dwelt in luda, and greate ioye was there at Ierusalem: for sence the tyme of Salomon the sonne of Dauid the kynge of Israel, was there no soch (ioye) at Ierusale. And the prestes and Leuites stocle vp and blessed the people, and their voyce was herde, and their prayer came in to his holy habitacion in heauen.

The mri. Chapter.

aND whan all this was fynished, all the Israelites that were founde in $\dot{y}$ cities of Iuda, wente out, and brake the pilers, and hewed downe the groues, and brake downe the hye places and altares out of all Iuda, Ben Iamin, Ephraim and Manasses, tyll they had destroyed thē. And all the children of Israel wente agayne euery one to his possession vnto their cities.

But Ezechias set the prestes and Leuites in their ordinaunces, euery one after his office, both the prestes and Leuites, for the burntsacrifices and thankofferynges, to mynister, to gene thankes and prayse in the gates of the hoost of the LORDE. And the kynge gaue his porcion of his substaunce for the burntoffergnges in the mornynge and euenynge, and for the burntofferynges of the Sabbath, and of the nermone and of the feastes, as it is wrytten in the lawe of the LORDE.

And he spake vnto $\begin{gathered} \\ \text { people which dwelt at }\end{gathered}$ Ierusalem, that they shulde geue porcioss nnto the prestes and Leuites, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ they mighte the more stedfastly endure in the lawe of the LORDE. And whà y worde came forth, the childrē of Israel gaue many fyrst frutes of corne, wyne, oyle, hony, and ail maner increace of the felde, and broughte in moch of all maner tithes. And the children of Israel and Iuda which dwelt in the cities of Iuda, broughte the tithes also of oxen and shepe, and the tithes of soch thinges as were sanctifyed, which they had halowed vnto the LORDE their God, and made here an heape, and there an heape. In the thirde moneth begane they to laye vpon heapes, and in the seuenth moneth dyd they fynishe it.

And whà Ezechias with the rulers wente in, and sawe the heapes, they praysed the LORDE, and his people of Israel. And Ezechias axed the prestes and Leuites concernynge the heapes. And Asaria the prest the chefe in the house of Sadoc, sayde vinto him: Sence the tyme that they beganne to brynge the Heueofferynges in to y house of the LORDE, we haue eaten, and are satisfied, and yet is there lefte ouer: for the LORDE hath blessed his people, therfore is this heape lefte ouer. Then commaunded the kynge, that they shnlde prepare chestes in the house of the LORDE. And they prepared them, and put in the Heueofferynges, and tithes and that which was halowed, faithfully.

And the ouersighte of the same had Chanania the Leuite, and Simei his brother the seconde, and Iehiel, Asasia, Naglath, Asahel, Ierimoth, Iosabad, Eliel, Iesmachia, Mahath and Benaia, ordeyned of the hande off Chanania and Simei his brother, acordinge to the commaundement of kynge Ezechias. But Asaria was prynce in the house of God. And Core $\dot{y}$ some of Iemna the Leuite the porter of the Eastgate was ouer the frewyllinge giftes of God (which were genen for Henentferynges vnto the LORDE) and ouer the Most holy. And voder his hande were, Eden, Miniamin, lesua, Semaia, Amaria, and Sachania in the cities of the prestes vpon credence, that they shulde geue vnto their brethre acordinge to their courses, to the leest as to the greatest.

And unto them that were counted for men childrē from thre yeare olle and aboue, amonge all the that wete in to the house of the LORDE, enery one vō his daye to their office in their attendaunces after their courses. And they that were rekened for prestes in the honse of their fathers, and the Leuites from twentye yeare and aboue, in their attendaunces after their courses. And they that were rekened amonge their children, wyues, sonnes and doughters amōge the whole congregacion: for that which was halowed, sanctifyed they vpon credence. There were men also named by name amonge Aarons children the prestes rpon the fetles of the suburbes in all $\hat{y}$ cities, that they shukde gene porcions vito all the men children amoge the prestes, and to all them that were nombred amonge the Leuites.

Thus dyd Ezechias in all Iuda, and dyd that which was good, righte and true in the sighte of the LORDE his God. And in all the busynes that he toke in hāde concernynge the seruyce of the house of God, acordinge to the lawe and commaundement, to seke his God, that dyd he with all his hert, and therfore prospered he well.

AFTER these actes and faithfulnes came Semmacherib ${ }^{a}$ the kynge of Assur, and wente in to Inda, and pitched before the stroge cities, and thoughte to plucke them vnto him. And whan Ezechias sawe that Sennacherib came, and that his face stode to fighte agaynst Ierusalem, he deuysed with his rulers and mightie men, to couer the waters of the welles that were without the eite, and they helped him: and there gathered together a greate people, and couered all $\mathfrak{y}$ welles and water brokes in the myddes of the londe, and sayde: Lest the kynges of Assur fynde moch water wha they come. And he toke a corage vnto him, and buylded all the walles where they were in decaye, and made towres theron, and buylled yet another wall without, and strengthed Millo in the eite of Dauid. And made moch ordinaunce and shyldes, and set captaynes of warre ouer the people.

And gathered them vnto him vpon the brode strete by the gate of the cite, and spake hertely vito them, and sayde: Be stronge and bolde, feare not, and be not afrayed for the kynge of Assur, ner all $\frac{8}{2}$ multitude that is with him: for there is one greater with vs then with him. With him is a * fleshly ame, but with vs is the LORDE oure God, to helpe vs and to fighte for vs. And y people trusted into the wordes of Ezechias kynge of luda.
${ }^{6}$ Afterwarde sent Sennacherib the kynge of Assur his seruamtes vato lerusalem (for he laye before Lachis, a all his hoost with him) to Ezechias $\dot{y}$ kinge of Iuda, a to all Iuda that was at lerusale, sayenge: Thus sayeth Semacherib y kynge of Assur: Wherin put [^361]ye youre trust ye that dwell in the beseged lerusalem? Ezechias disceaneth you, that he maye delyuer you vnto death, hōger, and thyrst, and sayeth: The LORDE oure God shal delyuer vs from the hande of the kynge of Assur. Is it not Ezechias, that hath put awaye his hye places and altares, and sayde vnto luda and lerusalem: Before one altare shal ye worshippe, and burne incense theron?

Knowe ye not what I and my fathers haue done to all $\hat{y}$ people in the londes? Haue the goddes of the Heythen in the londes bene able to delyuer their countrees fro my hande? What is he amonge all the goddes of these Heythen (whom my father danned) that was able to delyuer his people fro my hande? $\frac{t}{}$ youre God shulde be able to delyuer fro my hande. Therfore let not Ezechias now disceaue you, and let him not persuade you eny soch thinge, and belene him not. For yf no god of all the Heythe and kyngdomes might delyner his people fro my hande and from the hande of my progenitours, then shal not youre goddes be able to delyuer you fro my hande.

His seruañtes also spake yet more against the LORDE God, and agaynst his seruaunt Ezechias. And he wrote a letter to blaspheme the LORDE God of Israel, and spake of him, and sayde: Like as the goddes of the Heythen in their londes haue not bene able to delyuer their people from my hande, euen so shal not the God of Ezechias delyuer his people fro my hande.

And they eryed with loude voyce in the lewish langage vito the people of lerusalem that were vpon the wall, to make them fearfull and to be fayntharted, that they might wynne the cite. And they spake agaynst the God off Ierusalem, enen as agaynst the goddes off the nacions vpon earth, which were but the workes of mens hondes.

But contrary wyse the kynge Ezechias and the prophet Esay the somne of Amos prayed, and eryed vnto heaue. And the LORDE sent an angell, which destroyed all the mightie men of the hoost, and the prynces and rulers in $\mathfrak{y}$ tentes of the kynge of Assur, so that he departed agayne with shame in to his owne londe. + And whan he wente in to his gods house, they $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ came of his owne body, slewe him there with the swerde. Thus the LORDE helped Ezechias and them at Ierusalem, out of the hāde of Sennacherib $\hat{y}$ kynge of Assur， and of all other，and mayntayned the fro all on euery syde，so $\frac{t}{y}$ many broughte presentes vnto the LORDE to Ierusalem，and lewels onto Ezechias the kynge of Iuda．And afterwarde was he exalted in the sighte of all Heythen．

At $\hat{\mathrm{y}}$ same tyme was Ezechias deedsicke， and he prayed vnto the LORDE，${ }^{a}$ which made him promes，and gaue him a wonder－ token．But Ezechias recōpensed not acord－ inge as was geuen vnto him，for his hert was lifted vp：therfore came the wrath vpon him， and vpon Inda and Ierusalem．Neuertheles Ezechias humbled him selfe because his hert had bene exalted，with them at Ierusalem： therfore came not the wrath of the LORDE rpon them，whyle Ezechias lyued．

And Ezechias had very greate riches and worshippe，and made him treasures of syluer， golde，precious stones，spyces，shyldes，and all maner costly vessell，and corne houses for the increace of corne，wyne and oyle，and stalles for all maner catell，and foldes for the shepe， and buylded him cities，and had many catell of shepe and oxen：for God gaue him very moch good．

It is the same Ezechias that couered the hye water condyte in Gihon，and conveyed it vnder on the west syde of $\dot{y}$ cite of Dauid： for Ezechias prospered in all his workes．But whan the interpreters the chefe of Babilon were sent vnto him，to axe question at him （concernynge the wondertoke $\bar{e}$ that had hap－ pened in the londe）God lefte him＊to be tempted，that it might be knowne what soeuer was in his hert．

What more there is to saye of Ezechias， and of his mercifulnes，beholde，it is wrytte in the vision of the prophet Esay the sonne of Amos，and in the boke of the kynges of Inda and Israel．And Ezechias fell on slepe with his fathers，and they buried him oner the sepulcres of the children of Dauid，and all Iuda and they of Ierusale dyd him wor－ shippe in his death：and Manasses his some was kynge in his steade．
